IF you could only peep into the booths of the great majority of up-to-date theatres, you would find motiographs at work, as you will note by the very recent installation at the White House Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

There is a reason for the many installations—

It is perfection in projection combined with small initial cost.

STANDARDIZATION

AS a result of printing letters received from the various supply dealers throughout the country on this page, and particularly Letter No. 1, in the February 3 issue, we are in receipt of the following letter, which should interest the entire trade as it has us:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, INC.,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

GENTLEMEN:

We were particularly interested in the intelligent comments made by the writer of your letter No. 1. We take the liberty of quoting from one paragraph of that letter.

"We have ordered at various times one of practically every make of small machine that has been placed before the public. One thing we learned was that all these small machines which we handled shared the common disadvantage that they would not pass underwriters' insurance specifications."

Evidently this supply dealer in question has not handled the one make of machine, of which there are more in actual use than all other miniature makes combined, namely, the ————, or he would know that on account of its enclosed incandescent lamp and exclusive use of narrow width non-inflammable film of a patented perforation it was approved by the Underwriters' Laboratories more than two years ago, and is now in general and extensive use, not only in the United States but all over the world. This machine will not run the standard size motion picture film. That is just why it complies with the underwriters' rulings and is allowed to be used everywhere without the licensed operator or fireproof booth.

It has cost some of the largest industrial firms in this country hundreds of thousands of dollars to learn what the author of your letter No. 1 has learned, namely, that their standard sized motion picture films, even if printed on non-inflammable or slow-burning stock, cannot be used by them without complying with so many insurance and municipal restrictions as to be practically prohibitive; but these same industrial firms have many of them found required relief and freedom from restriction in the use of their films when copied on the narrow width film, the use of which is approved by the underwriters as well as by municipal and state authorities all over the country.

It occurs to us that there may be a number of your other readers, as well as the author of letter No. 1, who would be glad to have this information, and if you care to impart it in any way through the columns of your publication you are at liberty to do so.

THIS brings up a most interesting question which some day will have to be settled.

Is it best for this industry to have innumerable width films with as many different perforations and sprockets to match? Does it tend toward a larger, broader and increasing Motion Picture Industry? Would it be better to bend all our endeavors toward establishing a standard and educating the authorities and people to the actual conditions which exist in connection with projection machines? In other words—

ARE STANDARD MOTION PICTURE MACHINES AS DANGEROUS AS WE ARE LED TO BELIEVE?

One of the influential men in the industry told of the following. It is worthy of attention:

He was aiming to enlighten the authorities of a certain city as to the status of Motion Pictures. He wanted to set up a standard machine running standard film in an auditorium without a booth. The powers, said he, would not listen to him till he accused them of being responsible for the fires and panics which we admit occur at rare intervals in picture theatres. He went further. He told them that if a fire should occur under their jurisdiction with the result that lives were lost they should every one of them be put behind the bars—for they and no one else was responsible.

In explaining what he meant he showed them that picture fires are due to carelessness on the part of the operator. This negligence is only possible because of the absolutely rigid regulations made by the fire authorities. They have ruled that every machine should be enclosed in a fireproof booth in which no one can see or go. In this coop the operator can do as he pleases. He can litter up everything with oil-soaked rags; he can smoke at any time—and we know that many smoke whenever the spirit moves them—in fact, where everything was conducive to neglect, carelessness and indifference.

A film becomes clogged—a reel left on the floor. The operator gets some smoke in his eyes from his cigarette—he is for a second blinded. He fails to shut off his light—it starts the film burning. The heat is too much or he throws his cigarette on the floor—it lands in the film container or in the film which has fallen out of the machine. A fire starts. This is carelessness and can be blamed rightly to the ordinance makers. The result of it all was that our friend can now run a standard machine with standard film without a fireproof booth on a platform on the floor of the school auditoriums in that city. This is progress along the right line. It is merely an illustration of what can be done if the campaign is intelligently handled.

THE trouble is that we start with the fact that standard film burns—and then we go ahead and from this begin to build pictures of terrible dangers which result from its use. This gives the opening for the film without a standard, for the sprocket with specially arranged teeth; in fact, for a hybrid machine which may have its uses, but which surely does not belong in a

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

By I. G. SHERMAN

What Is Unionism?

E. J. M., K. F., A. J. and others who have asked the question at the head of this article will find the answer in the following:

A trade union is like a bank. If you expect to get anything out of it you must put something into it. No union can honor the drafts of a member on its support, its confidence and its moral backing unless that member gives to the union his support, his confidence and his moral backing. The union run on any other principle goes bankrupt. The blindness of many men to these elementary principles accounts for the weakness of many locals and for the indifference of many who are or have been nominally union men. These men want to reverse all the laws of nature and of business—to keep getting forever and to give never. They want the union to stand by them in their demands, to assist them in sickness and to defend them in difficulties, and when the union fails to do this they never stop to ask whether they are entitled from what they have put into the union to the help they ask at its hands. If you wish the maximum return on your investment in organized labor, choose that investment wisely in all its parts. Give it your financial help—not grudingly when your card is due, but gladly and generously when it must make a special appeal. Give it your moral support, always—not as though its officers were seeking to take an unfair advantage of their position, but freely and frankly, as fellow craftsmen. Give it your constant encouragement—not merely on the floor of the meeting room, but in the shop, theatre, and among non-union men. The poorest advertising organized labor gets is from its disaffected members. Give your union your presence and your counsel—not alone when the delegates to the convention are chosen or the little "'plums" are awarded, but in the transaction of all its business. There are few "plums" in the labor movement, as any officer of any local will tell you, but it is hard to make the rank and file believe this. Give the union the same loyal faith you give your wife or your church, remembering that to some men you are a mirror of organized labor and that labor will be judged by you. The man who has not faith in a brotherhood to which he belongs is potentially a traitor to it.

Make this sort of an investment and expect to get from it—what? Good interest on your money? Protection in sickness or old age? Relief in distress? You will get these things and something more, something better, SOMETHING BIGGER. If you are the right kind of a union man you will get from it the consciousness that you are an integral part of a great constructive agency. You will gather strength from number, inspiration from service, confidence from faith. You will be a workman whose manhood is not subordinated to his work. And finally you will become a contributor to that cause in which so many have labored to raise the laboring man from a condition of serfdom and place them on an equality with their employer, and makes the worker a man and not a slave. You who are unorganized owe it to yourself to do so, you owe it to the great American labor movement whose motto is "In union there is strength."

Making Good Under Difficulties

ONE day last week I happened in the neighborhood of Third Avenue and 51st street, and thinking that I might pick up a few pointers on Projection dropped in at the Windsor theatre, owned and managed by Mr. Samuel Cohn. To say that I was surprised at the projection would be putting it mildly, and after a visit to the operating room, which was in charge of Benny Silver, I really wondered how it was possible for him to project such an excellent picture with the antiquated apparatus with which he was working. The projecting machines were a Standard and a Simplex, both of which had seen better days, and yet there was the operator plugging along and putting on a first class show, where in some of our largest theatres with all modern and up-to-date appliances, the projection is not to be compared with that which I witnessed that day. Throwing a fifteen-foot picture a distance of 90 feet on an Atmospheric Screen, using about 30 amperes with a 110 volt supply, the picture was as clear as a bell. The theatre, which seats 500, is rather narrow and gives all the patrons an opportunity to view the picture without any eye strain caused by fade away or other evils, and by constantly watching the light and attending to business the operator was giving a most creditable performance. The show consists of eight reels of film for which the prices are five cents at matinees and ten cents at night. The thing I want to get at is this: how can a manager expect an operator to put on this kind of projection when he has no one to assist him? Ten hours in an operating room with no relief, not even a supper hour, is at best trying, and the operator has yet to be born who can under these conditions run as perfect a picture at 10 P. M. as he did at 4 P. M. If the manager would just for a day put himself in the operator's place I am sure he would realize the salary paid the operator was not commensurate with the work he was performing and would voluntarily increase wages, making it worth while for an operator to work for the best interests of his employer. This will not be my last visit to Third Avenue, for I intend to visit every theatre on the East Side if possible. There are men there whose work we seldom hear about yet which is as good if not better than that in some of our foremost "photoplay temples."

Sounds Good, But Will It?

J. C. Hornstein, New York City, writes: "We note in the Projection Department of the NEWS, page 780, an inquiry from 'A. C., Independence, Kansas,' in reference to a remedy which will obviate the depositing of carbon beads on the rear condenser when using Silvertip carbons. For your information we beg to state that we pass the following along to readers of your department: 'Obtain an ordinary cover glass such as is used for making slides, cut the edges round so that it will fit the condenser mount, and place this next to the arc. This will attract and receive all the silver beads that may be caused by air currents in the lamp house. We feel confident that there will be no loss of light from this glass being placed next to the condenser.'"

Answer: It sounds plausible. And as to whether there will be any light loss or not I am free to confess that I am not an optician and make no pretense to set myself up as an authority on optical questions. We do know though that the breakage of slides is caused by the intense heat from the arc and that as a general rule it is the cover glass that breaks first if the slides are placed properly in the carrier, the negative, or picture part of the slide will stand a far greater amount of heat, as the heat rays, if you want to call them that, have become dissipated by the intervention of the cover glass and the vacuum between the two glasses. If the cover glass is placed against the condenser in such a way as to prevent a vacuum between glass and condenser it seems as though this glass might last for some time. Anyway the cost of cover glasses is so slight that it might be worth giving it a trial. Therefore, I am submitting it to my readers in the hope that it will prove valuable in doing away with the annoyance caused by the depositing of metal on the rear condenser. In justice to the National Carbon Company I want to say that any carbon, whether metal coated or otherwise, will cause this condition when the arc is placed too near the rear condenser.

E. A. R., Phillipsburg, N. J.

The request has gone forth to the proper authorities and you will probably hear from them in a few days. The address you ask for is as follows: 107 West 46th Street, New York City, a letter addressed to either M. C. Higgins or Frank G. Lemaster will receive their attention and you will obtain the information desired.

Troubles of a Small Town Operator

AN operator located in a very small town writes the following letter and for obvious reasons I leave all names blank, there is much food for thought as well as entertainment in his letter, so here goes: "Am in a small town of two hundred inhabitants with no railroad or electric lights. I have an old Edison machine, about an 1898 model, I think, and a Model B gas making outfit. We run one show every Saturday night, if it don't rain. My boss, Mr. ———, takes a team of mules and goes to —— ———, to get the films which come from the ——— exchange ———.

The films are always in bad condition, and last Saturday one broke. I tried mucilage and paste, but it did not seem to stick very good. Can you tell me what to use?

My machine makes so much noise. I tried putting lard and hub grease on the gears, and that thing that makes the picture jerk, but it don't seem to help any. Can you tell me what I should use?

I have been running a machine only three weeks, the other operator left suddenly and did not show me a thing about the outfit. My boss said "I was going fine," and that I have a better picture than the fat operator at the ——— theatre at ———, which is the finest house in this part of ———. My boss got an old MOTION PICTURE NEWS the last time he was in ———, and that is how I happened to see the projection. Excuse me for making this letter so long but I thought you might be interested to hear how a small town man gets along. I had a funny thing happen to me last Saturday, one of the films was backward and I did not see it until I was running it, and it was so funny and the people were enjoying it so much that I did not stop but ran it clear through and then I ran it the right way and the town is still talking about it. Do the bigger cities ever run it that way? Can you tell me where I can get catalogues or books on moving picture machine running? What do you have to know when you want to join a union like they have in ———? What is the fan for? My boss said it was to keep the glass tube cool in the summer time so it don't break. Can you tell me how to take it off, or do I have to use it in the winter too? Excuse me for asking so many questions, but it is the only way we can learn out here. Hoping to see your answer in next MOVING PICTURE NEWS, ———, ———."

Answer: You have my heartfelt sympathy. The operators in the "bigger cities" little realize just what their small town brother is up against, and while some of them may take this letter as a joke, I am sure they will get much pleasure in reading your letter. The old saying: Perseverance will conquer, certainly holds good in your case. And even though you have only been operating three weeks there is a great future in store for you if you maintain that spirit of "never say die." I had made up my mind to suggest that your "boss" get a new machine, but I suppose that would not be possible, as yon only run one show a week, but you can do this: Take the mechanism off the base board and removing the "glass tube," otherwise known as the lens, place the machine in a metal bucket and pour gasoline over it until all the lard and hub grease has been removed. If it does not come off easily take a small brush and brush out the gears. After all grease and dirt have been removed, allow the mechanism to dry thoroughly taking care that there is no smoking going on while you are washing and drying the machine. After it has become dry, oil the bearings with a light oil, "3 in 1" will do, or some other kind of light oil, but with a light oil it will be necessary to lubricate the machine more often. The operators in the bigger cities never use lard or hub grease on the gears, they use either a heavy oil or vaseline mixed with flake graphite, and "the thing that makes the picture jerk" will work much better if you use a light oil on it. It is called the intermittent movement, and consists of a star and cam, and you must not loosen the screws that hold the bushings at either end of the shaft, for if you do you will put a jinx on the entire machine. It was a rather dirty trick the other operator played on you. He might have given you a few pointers before he left, but perhaps it is just as well, for when one is thrown on their own resources the knowledge gained is not so apt to be forgotten as it might be, if some one were to tell you how to do this or that. It must be very gratifying to you to have your boss speak so well of you, and there is a possible chance that you may get "the fat operator's" job, which would be quite a feather in your cap.

No, sorry to say, the operators in the larger cities never run the film backward, except on rare occasions, the operators as well as the public have not the sense of humor that exists in the smaller towns. The fact that "the town is still talking about it" should be good advertising for the theatre and should succeed in filling every seat when exhibitions are given. (Exhibitors who might want to try this stunt have my permission. Ed.). I would suggest that you get your boss to subscribe for the NEWS and give you the copy when he has finished with it. There is, sometimes, many things of value in the Projection department, and you may be able to pick up quite a bit of information by reading it. If you will send me your post office address I will have books sent you which will help you a great deal, and when you have absorbed all the information in them you should have very little difficulty in joining the Union, but I would not attempt to do so now, the examination is, I understand, a pretty stiff one. Under no circumstances remove the "fan." It is the shutter which cuts the light while the picture is being changed at the aperture. Without this shutter there would be no movement to the picture, you would have only black and white streaks running up and down the screen. While it might help to keep the lens cool in the summer it must also be used in the winter, for the purpose I have just stated. And finally, tell your boss to send to the exchange and get you a bottle of film cement, a specially prepared liquid for mending broken film. t

Aluminum Screen

A. J. B., Canastota, N. Y., writes: "Have been a constant reader of the NEWS Projection Department and have found many little kinks there that have been of great help. And now, if it is not asking you too much, would like to have you tell me if it is possible for an exhibitor or operator to make their own aluminum screen. Can it be done with any degree of success, and if so will you tell me how to proceed?"

Answer: Well, you have surely started something now. It is quite possible to make such a screen, but the degree of success depends largely upon the way in which this delicate job is carried out. The following is one method of making a first-class screen: the screen may be of any desired size which may be determined by the size picture to be projected and the length of throw. First make a light frame of wood to hold the cloth, then shrink the goods by washing it in alum water, using a handful of alum to a two-gallon pail of water which makes a suitable solution. When the cloth is dry, tack it on the frame, making sure that it is stretched tightly and without wrinkles. To make a neat job tack about every four inches. The filler consists of one gallon linseed oil; one pint japan drier, and six pounds of white lead. Stir until well mixed and apply with a brush, giving the cloth a second coat after letting the first dry for twelve hours. When the second coat is dry, which requires about sixteen hours if the room in which the work is being done is moderately warm, it is ready for the aluminum, or bronzing, liquid. You will find it is a difficult job if you try to apply this liquid with a brush, as it dries too quickly for the inexperienced to put it on without making laps, and laps mean that wavy effect that must be avoided if clear pictures are to result. For a screen whose measurements are, let us say, eight feet in height by ten feet in width, you will require a half gallon of bronzing liquid; if this cannot be obtained, use varnish slightly thinned with turpentine. Place the screen on horses such as carpenters use or on four chairs, the face side of the screen up, and pour the liquid on it. Tilt the screen first one way and then the other so that the liquid will flood every part of the face, or smooth side. Before this liquid dries sprinkle on aluminum bronze covering the entire surface of the screen. Tilt the screen as before, shaking it from time to time so that the bronze will be distributed over the surface. Place the screen on the horses, or chairs, as level as possible, and let it lie until dry, which will require from two to three hours. Then stand the screen up on edge and tap it lightly on the back so as to jar off any loose particles of bronzing powder. This will produce a screen without any lap or wave effect. It is the only method by which any one not familiar with the various kinds of screen paints can do the job with any degree of success, leaving out the laps and streaks. Much patience must be exercised, but if above directions are followed, a good serviceable screen should be the result. For your kind words of praise, thanks.

UNION ANNOUNCEMENTS

In last week's issue of the NEWS it was announced that the ball to be given by Local No. 35 was to be held on the evening of Sunday, February 25. I have since been informed that the date should have been announced as Saturday, February 24 and take this means of making an early correction.

The members of all affiliated unions in the Greater City, as well as all others who remember the exceptionally good times had at any previous affair given by this organization, are cordially invited to be among those present and help make this year's event an unqualified success.

A new union of motion picture machine operators has been organized at Sheboygan, Wisconsin. The new union is to be known as Local 476, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O.

Starting off with a membership of twenty the boys feel that they can accomplish a great deal toward the betterment of their conditions as well as place themselves upon a more friendly footing with their employers. The officers elected to serve for the present year are as follows: H. Fredrichs, president; A. Brewchel, vice-president; Otis Gerke, recording secretary; A. Schieble, secretary-treasurer.

The new local and its officers have the best wishes of this department for their success in all their undertakings. May the spirit of fair play and justice be their foundation and the desire for knowledge their cornerstone. Builded upon these their house will not be "built upon the sands," but one that will endure for all time.

At the special election held by Local 306, Motion Picture Machine Operators of Greater New York, at their meeting rooms, 57 St. Mark's Place, Brothers Harry Mackler and Sam Kaplan were elected to represent that body at the Convention of the I. A. T. S. E., to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, the latter part of February.

Power's Motor Drive

S. H. P., New York, writes: "Have made my own motor drive for Power 6 machines. Am running both machines with motor belted to flywheel using a ⅜-inch belt. Will send you photographs of it if you can use them. Can you tell me what size condensers to use for a ten-foot picture where the throw is 80 feet."

Answer: You are projecting too small a picture for the length of throw, which calls for an objective lens of about 7½ inch E.F. Two 7½-inch focal length condensers should fill the bill, if not then you had better get a 7½ and an 8½ unless your employer will change his objective for one of shorter focal length which will give a somewhat larger and much more satisfactory picture. No, don't send photographs of your method of driving the machines. It is bad dope. Send to the Nicholas Power Company, and get their motor drive attachments for both machines. It will save you money and trouble in the long run. When belted to the flywheel there is too great a strain placed on the most delicate part of the mechanism—the intermittent movement, therefore it is a thing to be avoided.

Gets His Goat

A. Y., Providence, R. I., writes: "Kindly inform me which is the shortest focal length condensers you can obtain. On what occasion do you use such a condenser as 3½ or 4½ focal length? Does the size of the picture have anything to do with the condenser, what I mean is, could you use say, two 7½ condensers with a picture, say 18 feet? Could you use the same condensers on a 12-foot picture. I have been operating about five years and aiways got by all right, but the condenser is something that gets my goat, and there are lots of other operators in the same boat, only they are afraid to learn.

Answer: You can obtain a condenser of 3½-inch focal length, but it would be of a shape resembling half a sphere, and the use of such a pair of condensers would be impractical for two reasons: the loss of light would be too great, and it would be impossible to get them in the regular condenser mount. The condenser is measured with regard to the focal length of the objective lens, the shorter the focal length of the objective the shorter the focal length of the condenser and vice versa. For example, if you have an objective lens whose focal length is under 3½ inches, two 6½-inch condensing lenses will give the best results. When the focal length of the objective is between 3½ and 4½ e.f., one 6½ and one 7½-inch condenser will be the thing, while when the objective is of a greater focal length than 4½ inches two 7½-inch condensers should be used. The same condensers will project any size picture, according to distance if the focal length of the objective lens is the same in all cases.

Edison Loop Setter

W. B., Glenville, West Virginia, writes: "Will you please answer the following for me: Is there a loop setter for the Edison, Model B, projection machine, if so does that company put it on their machines? Do they still manufacture this model, and is the lower sprocket, shaft and bearings the same as on the older models? I have made a loop setter which so far has never failed to set the loop as many times and as quickly as you can push the lever. Any information you can give me on this will be appreciated very much."

Answer: No, the Edison, Model B, has no loop setter, consequently they do not put it on that model machine. As to whether they still manufacture this machine or not I cannot tell you. I think this company bent all their energies on the manufacture of their latest model Super-Kinetoscope which has proven very satisfactory in those theatres which adopted it. The plans of this company are rather uncertain, but this I can say, on good authority: They have not given up the manufacture of projection machines and will announce their plans shortly. To the best of my rememberance the only difference between the Moedl B and the older outfit, known as the Exihibition Model, was in the construction of the machine base, the Model B having an all metal base as against the wooden base used on the earlier models, then too the lower sprocket was flanged so as to prevent the film running off the sprocket. I would be pleased to have drawings of your loop setter, and if it will do as you claim, it might be of interest to other operators. As for trying to obtain a patent on this device, I would advise you to go careful.

Minusa Sells Well in Michigan

THE Grant Heth Company, 311 Majestic Building, Detroit, Michigan, agents for Minusa screens, reports a big year in 1916 and fine prospects for 1917. Grant Heth personally supervises all installations in Michigan of Minusa screens.

Among the Michigan theatres which have recently, or are about to instal Minusa screens are the Oakland theatre at Pontiac, which will open March 1; the Ferrz Field and New Russell; the Villa theatre; the new quarter million Rialto theatre; New Madison theatre due to open in a few weeks, and the Family theatre, all of Detroit. In addition to the above the Ford Motor Company has installed a Minusa gold fibre in their demonstration room at the factory and Henry Ford has placed an order for one for his new private residence, said to be one of the most palatial in this section of the country.

Berger's Prize Winning Design

THE Berger Manufacturing Company, Canton, Ohio, has a new insignia design, as shown herewith, which will be used in all the publicity of this concern in the future.

The matter of selecting a new insignia received a great deal of consideration and it was finally decided to offer a substantial prize.

The contest closed recently, and Miss M. A. Goodwin, a student in the Chicago School of Applied and Normal Arts, was the winner, submitting the design shown.

The Manufacture of Cinematograph Film Stock

THE methods of coating and drying cine films, as outlined in our previous chapters, are similar in all essential details, to those practised in preparing hand-camera films and photographic printing papers; but when our roll of celluloid has been coated with emulsion and dried we come to a point of divergence from the procedure followed when preparing sensitized films and papers for ordinary photography.

Following the removal of the coated and dried roll of film stock from the rewind of the take-down apparatus comes the operation of slitting up the large roll of sensitized film into narrow ribbons or strips of the dimensions required in the cinematographic processes.

This is accomplished with speed and precision by the use of a "slitting machine," such as is shown in Fig. 3. The slitting machine shown in Fig. 3, is representative in appearance and operation, of all machines used in this class of work, and the machines used in slitting up the wide sheets of sensitive photographic film are similar or identical in design to those used in the paper-box industry for slitting paper into narrow ribbons.

A study of Fig. 3, will readily make clear the manner in which a wide roll of coated film stock is divided into narrow bands by the slitting machine. After mounting the uncut roll on a suitable mandrel (or shaft) at one side of the apparatus the end of the celluloid sheet is passed between two rows of circular cutters, which latter are mounted on suitable spindles and revolve rapidly in opposite directions. Upon passing through these two rows of circular cutters or "roller shears" the film sheet is, of course, divided into bands or strips of desired width and then passes to the take-up (or rewind) spindles at the back of the machine.

The slitting and rewinding machine shown in the illustration (Fig. 3) is the extremely efficient Knowlton slitter made by the M. D. Knowlton Co., of Rochester, N. Y. While designed primarily for use in slitting paper the Knowlton machine (with some slight modifications) is also capable of high class results when used as a slitter for cinematograph film. There are numerous other slitting machines of high grade, but we have mentioned the Knowlton slitter because we are well acquainted with its capabilities in the particular line of work now being considered.

Simple and automatic though it may seem, the operation of cutting a film roll up into cinematographic bands requires painstaking attention as do all other details in the manufacture of sensitized photographic materials. The rotary cutting wheels of the slitting machine must have their cutting edges prepared and ground to a different clearance (or bevel) than the cutters of a machine for slitting paper, and upon the attention paid to this seemingly small detail largely rests the accuracy and smoothness with which the film strips will be cut. Another item of importance is the temperature and humidity of the dark-room in which the film is slit, which must be so regulated as to minimize, as far as possible, the generation of static electricity by the frictional contact of the rotary cutters with the celluloid film. As will be readily apparent, considerable havoc would be wrought if any appreciable amount of sparking (due to static electrical discharges) occurred while the film was passing between the cutting wheels.

Static troubles, incident to the slitting operation, are avoided by regulating the speed at which the coated celluloid sheet passes through the slitting machine, as well as by maintaining the dark-rooms at a carefully regulated temperature and degree of humidity.

Under favorable atmospheric conditions the film roll can be slit into ribbons at the rate of 25 feet per minute and if suitable precautions are taken a higher speed might be possible.

As is generally known, the standard width for a cinematograph film strip is 35 mm., and when it is borne in mind that this strip must be capable of passing readily through the mechanisms of any and all of the numerous makes and models of cameras, projectors, and printing machines on the market it will be appreciated that cinematographic film strips must be cut with great accuracy from the parent roll of stock, otherwise troubles of considerable magnitude will ensue when the film strips are issued for use.

Obviously, if there is any inaccuracy in the width of the film band it should be discovered before it leaves the manufactory, so all reputable makers of cinematograph film stock run the bands through a verifying machine as soon as they are received from the slitting room.

Such a device is known as a "width testing machine" and is similar in appearance to that shown in Fig. 4. As will be appreciated after an inspection of Fig. 4, the width of the film is verified while the roll is being rewound on the device there illustrated.

In Fig. 4, A is a support to which the roll of cine film is mounted by the removable spindle at its center. The end of the film strip to be tested is next passed through the device B and from thence to the rewind spindle E. The device B is so constructed that it touches the film strip only at its edges, and is so adjusted that it can detect a variation as slight as 1/2000 inch in the width of the film band. Attached to the width testing device B (Fig. 4) is a pointer C which plays over the face of an indicator dial D. When a film strip is being tested (as to its accuracy of width) the operator rewinds the film from A to E (Fig. 4) and watches the indicator dial D. The slightest variation in the width of the film from the 35 mm. standard would cause the rejection of the roll of film being examined.

Some of the most up-to-date patterns of width testing machines are fitted with an electrical attachment which rings a bell should any variation in width manifest itself as the film passes through the measuring device. This is a handy feature as by its use the operative need not watch the indicator dial, but instead may examine the emulsioned surface of the film for evidences of defective coating. Defects due to the emulsion coating operation are rarely seen now, although in years gone by rejections of film stock were quite considerable owing to streaks in the emulsion caused by improper coating.

When the film strips have passed these searching tests as to accuracy of width, and their freedom from other defects they are ready for wrapping up in black and waterproof paper and sealing up in the customary cans with which all cameramen are familiar. Although this last stage in the preparation of a cinefilm for the market (wrapping and sealing into cans) is a simple one, still a great deal of carelessness exists in the performance of this operation. A prolific cause of static in cinefilms is the rough and indifferent way in which the rolls of film stock are handled in the final rewinding and wrapping operations. This condition exists even in the factories of the largest film makers, but is one which the future may remedy.

In offering this brief description of the film manufacturing process to Camera Department readers, we have by no means endeavored to present an exhaustive technical treatise on the subject, but rather, a simplified description of some interesting devices and operations about which very little detailed information has appeared.

This article we believe is the first exposition of the methods by which cinefilms are prepared, but, in its brief form, does not dwell upon the many interesting angles of photographic manufacture, from the actual and practical viewpoint of the manufacturer.

Such readers as would like to approach the subject from a practical viewpoint are referred to an extremely interesting article on "The Photographic Industry," which was prepared by Dr. C. E. K. Mees, and appears in the "Journal of the Society of Chemical Industry."—April 15, 1912—page 307.

Dissolve Attachment Perfected for Use with Universal Camera

A DISSOLVE or "fade out" attachment of unique conception and considerable efficiency has recently been introduced by the makers of the Universal motion picture camera for use with that well-known instrument.

Through the courtesy of Burke & James, 240-258 East Ontario street, Chicago, who are sole distributors of the Universal camera, we are pleased to present Camera Department readers with the following description of the new device, which will, doubtless, find favor with users of Universal cine cameras:

The Universal Dissolve, like the Universal camera, is simple and efficient. It is entirely automatic in its action, and costs less than the average hand-operated dissolve. It is the only automatic dissolve which has no mechanical connection with the operating mechanism of the camera. It is entirely self-contained and self-efficient and its operation, which is accomplished by merely pushing a button, involves no calculation of the shutter opening.

The Universal Dissolve is as simple to operate as an electric wall switch. You simply push the black button to dissolve out, and push the white button to dissolve in, and the instrument does the rest.

The working parts are all gold plated to prevent rust and corrosion and require no lubrication. No sunshield is required with the Universal Dissolve, as the dissolve itself acts as a sun shield. In fact it is superior to the ordinary barrel type sun shield which screws into the lens and after continued use, loosens the front cell of the lens, thereby affecting its defining qualities.

The Universal Dissolve is neither a diaphragm dissolve nor a shutter dissolve, but operates on a principle which is new in moving picture cameras. A specially prepared glass disc is rotated by a gear train controlled by a governor which is timed to produce one revolution of the disc in five seconds. No winding or setting being necessary, the Universal dissolve is always ready for use. It can be attached or removed in two seconds and weighs but nine ounces. It produces a true fade away dissolve and is suitable for any purpose for which a dissolve is intended. While built-in dissolves in most moving picture cameras cost from $100 to $200 extra, the Universal dissolve sells for $35, including attachment to the Universal camera. The Universal dissolve is not supplied for use on cameras other than the Universal. It is finished in 24 carat gold plate and enamel, and is packed in a plush lined leather case.

theatre, school, church or any other semi-public place, for the simple reason that they are not standard and their range of use is naturally limited. In places where people gather there must be an installation which is capable of showing any and all pictures. The special product of one company is not feasible, the range of subjects is too narrow. In the home where the purchaser is alive to what he is buying and is satisfied with one product it is different. Even in this case a standard film—standard perforations, and standard sprocket is more serviceable. If non-inflammable film can be gotten of non-standard gauge it certainly can be gotten for standard gauge.

If an outfit is cheap and a man can get a special camera and special projector to match which will do the work and which will cause him to become interested in Motion Pictures we have still another condition. This acts as an incentive to something bigger—sales of this kind will lead in many cases to a professional camera and a standard projector, and will not materially interfere with the present active movement toward STANDARDIZATION which is being led by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. We do not, however, believe that the dealers will ever be successful in installing machines of any kind which do not adhere to the standard in public or semi-public places.

Atmospheric Reports Success in New York

THE Atmospheric Screen Co., 222 West 42nd street, New York City, reports that their business is forging ahead and that they have received a large number of orders during the past week for their screens to be placed in theatres around New York. One of the great advantages claimed by the company is that the audience in the front part of the house is able to enjoy the pictures to the same advantage as those further back. The company also claims that the screen grows better with age.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Organ Accompanying with Orchestra

THERE are many organists who take to orchestra accompanying instinctively. Others have much difficulty when supporting an orchestra in an artistic and effective manner. The church organist who has had experience accompanying a choir or chorus of voices is usually less troubled with orchestra accompaniment that the pianist-organist. It is advisable for the latter to study church-music and the methods employed in getting the best results from anthems, chorals, hymns, solos and oratorios.

The first thing to be understood, when analyzing a hymn-tune is that it is not piano music nor organ music, but a small vocal score, i.e., the soprano and alto parts on the upper staff, the tenor and bass on the lower. This must be turned into organ music, deftly and accurately. The orchestra-organist must prepare himself for making adaptations and transcriptions at sight, for these are important features when playing an organ accompaniment for an orchestra.

For illustration we will consider a hymn tune and how it should be played. In the first measure we have as the foundation note, F, which is written as a half note and two-quarter notes. On the organ F should be played as a whole note or as two half notes. The same rules applies to piano music when adapted for the organ. Often the organist will come across pieces with a great amount of bass notes. On piano it would be possible to play them all, but on the organ, especially where the movement is rapid, many of the notes must be played as whole notes or half notes in order to get the best effect. The same method must be applied to the left and right hand. There are times when a chord accompaniment is more effective than the number played exactly as written.

The piano has not the power of sustaining tone indefinitely, but it has the "damper pedal" for binding tones together and for furnishing harmonic background. An arpeggio is usually played with the damper pedal down. If played on the organ exactly as written it would sound insignificant. It must be full and effective. The usual method employed by organists when playing an arpeggio is to sustain the first note in the bass and gradually work up in chords instead of playing single notes.

Repeated chords, so common in piano accompaniments are invariably bad on the organ, since, when a key is released sound immediately ceases; a detached and clicking effect being the result. This may be remedied by sustaining the bass and the upper note of the chord. The single sustained note serves to steady and connect the organ tone at the same time suggesting the effect of the damper pedal. The above suggestions are not intended to apply to pure staccato effects, as the staccato on the organ grows monotonous, if long continued. It is advisable to vary solo organ playing with legato and staccato movements, which for pictures are very effective.

As the organ is principally a supporting instrument, discretion and common sense must be employed in order to get the best results. The organist must be extremely careful and not allow the bass to be too loud or too heavy. At times this will not be noticed by the organist or even the leader, but a heavy and predominating bass can be easily heard in the back of the theatre and many an effect of a well-rendered selection is spoiled by the organist being careless in this respect.

Many of the publishers are now including harmonium and organ parts with orchestrations. In many respects these parts can be played exactly as written. Many harmonium parts resemble the same harmonic treatment used in the hymn-tunes. The organist who has mastered the art of church music for the organ should experience little difficulty with harmonium or organ parts.

Every organist should be supplied with an organ or piano part in order to get the best results from his efforts. With certain numbers it is impossible to secure an organ part, this being due to the fact that none are published. The standard numbers usually contain an organ part. With small numbers, novelettes, intermezzos, etc., the organist may be forced to use a second violin or bass part if a piano part is unavailable. Some find it easy to play from these parts, but for others who experience difficulty the part should be practised and studied before playing it with an orchestra.

Organ accompanying for an orchestra demands more accuracy and more musical skill than any other instrument for the reason that the organ is situated so that it is not easily heard by the organist. Therefore his technic must be clean and his harmony perfect, for, unlike other instruments, the organist depends entirely on sense of touch instead of sound. There are many numbers, overtures for example, or solo numbers, where the organ can stand out above the orchestra, but when playing for pictures the organ must not predominate; it must support the orchestra fully, but never become too loud or too soft.

Young and inexperienced organists are sometimes inclined to play the piano part as written, including variations and the parts of other instruments. In other words, some organists strive to be the "whole show." When using piano parts the organist must be extremely versatile, and it is more important to know what not to play in certain selections. Organists must be careful and exercise the best judgment in their interpretation of piano music on the organ when accompanying an orchestra, and it is advisable to refer to the full orchestral score for purpose of comparison and analysis.

Genuine orchestral effects can rarely be reproduced with exactitude, but certain colorings, combinations and tone effects, produced by the intelligent manipulation of the three great orchestral choirs, strings, wood-wind and brass, may be successfully suggested or implied.

The average young organist will accept the registration marked in a piece without ever dreaming that it might be varied and improved upon. Often a certain effect may sound well to the organist, but in the back of the theatre it may not be as pleasing to the audience. Why not call in a few musicians and have them stand in the rear of the house while you try the various combinations. Then get their opinion as to the combinations that are the most suitable and pleasing.

Organ accompanying with an orchestra is the ambition and goal of every organist and success can be only achieved by hard and serious study with close attention to details. The organist must be observant. He must study the effects of a large orchestra and organ and aside from being a true musician he must be extremely versatile and develop the capacity for patient labor, as the demands and requirements of an orchestra-organist are unlimited.

A CONTRIBUTOR.

An Appreciation

EDITOR (Music Dept.)

DEAR SIR:

I have just read with much interest Mr. Anderson's letter on playing pictures, in your last issue. I have never expressed myself before, but I would just like to meet Mr. Anderson and shake his hand, for he has practically the same ideas as I have, and that I have tried to convince many people who were supposed to know the business.

I too am an organist, and like Mr. Anderson, I have been playing pictures since the days of the one-reel picture that only showed a cowboy riding his pony. I played organ for a long time in Atlanta, Ga., and all over the South. I am now playing organ for the Campbell theatre, Hazelton, Pa.

Cue sheets are valuable I think to orchestra leaders. But not too much to an organist or pianist who plays alone. Improvising, is a talent, not an accomplishment. I have known good musicians who could play anything so long as the music was in front of them. But take the music away, and they lost. Musicians are born, and so are picture organists or pianists. However, I don't mean to say that musicians can't learn to play pictures. One must be capable of memorizing innumerable pieces of music; and be a quick thinker; he must be able to modulate so as not to make a sudden change that sounds harsh; and be able to play any kind of music. I have sat in picture shows and looked at a good picture ruined by poor and absurd music. I have a musician friend who is of the "Longhaired" type who has criticized me severely for playing ragtime and popular music on organ. I like him, but couldn't watch a picture while he played for it. If I play some classified piece of music to a love scene, that is really a great piece of music, and suitable to the scene only in name, nine-tenths of my audience don't know what I'm playing and don't enjoy it. But if I play some old piece like "You're More Than the World to Me" they readily see the harmony of the music with the picture.

I enjoy your magazine every week, and have long been a reader of the "music for the picture" department.

Yours very truly,

HAROLD PRICE,
Campbell Theatre,
Hazleton, Pa.

California Closes Big Contract

THE California Organ Company, with plant at Van Nuys, California, has, within the past few days, made contracts for the installation of two instruments. One is now being placed in Miller's theatre at Ninth and Main streets. This is described as being a three manual orchestral organ with legitimate orchestra drums and traps, and a ceiling echo.

The second is to be placed in the Quinn's new Rialto theatre which is now in the course of construction on the east side of Broadway between Eighth and Ninth street, Los Angeles. This also is a three manual orchestral organ with echo from the opposite end of the auditorium, and complete orchestra drums and traps. R. P. Elliott, general manager of the California Organ Company is responsible for these two sales.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

Don't Expect the Public to See Pictures Through a "Blind" Lobby

THE lobby is the eye of your theatre and you must depend upon it to catch the eye of the passing crowds. Did you ever hear of a blind man becoming a hypnotist? Of course not. Neither did you hear of a neglected lobby exercising any hypnotic influence on the sidewalk throngs in need of amusement.

Suppose there was a dog fight outside the door of the theatre with an unattractive lobby. What chance would the unprogressive exhibitor owning it have against the free entertainment? Figure it out yourself. But if his lobby had been fitted up attractively, people would go inside to see the show and the exhibitor would have no competition with the canine disturbance.

Pay attention to your lobby. Don't take a chance on anything happening before your house that is going to keep pedestrians outside—whether it's a dog fight, a suffragette orator, a circus parade or an organ grinder's monkey taking up a collection. Let everybody know that you have a much better show inside, even if it does cost ten cents or a quarter.

The exhibitor who fails to realize the importance of the lobby as a pulling power is a close relative of the man who use to think that good music was not necessary for the pictures. It is easy to imagine these two men wondering if the business isn't on its last legs, because the seats in their theatres were empty most of the time. But when they go around the corner and see the crowds lined up before the box office of the "Get'em and Please'em" theatre they begin to realize that motion pictures are still popular, and increasing in popularity. But the management of the "Get'em and Please'em" theatre knew that something had to be done beforehand to get people inside. And, of course, it was done by making the lobby so attractive that everybody who passed felt an irresistible desire to see more of the house and what it had to offer, and then when they got inside it was found to be worth a return visit.

The lobby is a pretty safe guide to the public of the enterprise of the management in procuring the best pictures for the neighborhood in which the theatre is located.

The theatres reproduced on this page show a marked contrast between houses lacking all elements of attractiveness and those with pleasing fronts. In the case of those that are severely plain, they create a repellent feeling. You can imagine people patronizing them only because there is no worth while theatre in easy walking distance. Instead of making a person feel joyful at the prospect of being amused they make him wonder if he is about to enter an undertaking establishment.

The creation of such a mood is fatal. People instinctively move away from places like that, or go inside from sheer desperation because there is no other theatre to beckon them with more cheerful promise. These are the kind of houses that have no chance with the dog fights and circus parades. Yet these same theatres could be made very attractive.

What a difference between these theatres with Gloomy Gus lobby fronts and the others on which the owners have exercised their ingenuity to good purpose? Take for instance, the Garden, in Paterson, N. J. It shows how an ordinarily plain front can be easily converted into something striking without remodeling, and at comparatively little expense. The unattractive joists have been covered with show cases put into place with little trouble and at a saving of several hundreds of dollars. The woodwork has all the appearance of elaborate carving and creates a richness of decorative effect quite unattainable otherwise.

The U. S. theatre, 195th street and Webster avenue, New York City, is another instance of sidewalk display in excellent taste. The same panel effect is evident on either side of the entrance. As the illustration shows, the front of the theatre has been improved a hundred per cent. An addition of this kind could be put on any theatre front without expensive alterations to the building.

Still another instance of effective sidewalk display is the Strand, Newark, N. J. Wall cases have been installed which cannot fail to hold the attention of the most casual observer and make him stop to read the signs, with an overwhelming desire to find out what it's all about.

The moment he does that, his next step is to step inside—and that's all you want. But would his curiosity have been excited as quickly without the aid of the modern patronage magnet—the high class lobby display?

The plain theatres whose fronts are reproduced herewith could be made attractive with little expense and no alteration of the buildings. Take the house with the overhanging bow windows. Wall cases or lobby frames could be set just outside the entrance doors and the building would look like other theatres. Some attempt has been made to make the one story structure with the wide lobby, look like a place of amusement. But the posters give one an impression of half measures. How much better would this theatre appear with a neat wall case on either side of the entrance? The owner of the two-story frame building with the square front has not even considered it necessary to put a poster outside. The patron enters with a feeling that seeing the show is a lottery inasmuch as he has no clue to the name of the picture or anything about it.

The average theatregoer does not care to take his amusement on such bare speculation. It's too much like "buying a pig in a poke." Don't ask your patrons to see pictures that way. If you expect it of them too long they will eventually go to the theatres where the management doesn't ask so much unnecessary tolerance.

The Rex of Vancouver a Beautiful House

IN the Rex theatre the people of Vancouver, B. C., have a motion picture house of which they may be proud, it being one of the most beautiful houses in that section of the country.

The theatre is constructed of concrete, brick and steel. The construction work was under the personal supervision of W. P. Deweer, who is also the manager. The theatre has an ideal location in the business center of the city at 25 Hastings street West.

The measurements of the house are 66 feet wide by 132 feet deep. The front of the theatre is artistically decorated and a wonderful system of illuminating the exterior at night is one of the main features. The building is outlined with electric lights and the lobby is lighted by the indirect method, lights being concealed in light troughs. A colored electric flash sign is also used, this being one of the best mediums of advertising and keeping a theatre in the eye of the public.

The lobby, which is about 50 feet wide by 60 feet deep, including foyer, contains several display frames taking one, three and six sheet posters. The box office, which is constructed of concrete and plate glass, is centered between the two doors leading into the foyer. The box office contains a National Cash Register Company ticket selling machine. The doors leading into the theatre are of sheet metal and are finished in gold.

The interior of the theatre is decorated in a Renaissance style and finished in gray and gold with white marble trimmings. The walls are divided into panels with heavy gold borders. On either side of the screen which is set into an arch are the organ pipes which are not only useful but also serve as decoratings, filling in a space which would otherwise be bare.

The indirect lighting system is used, the fixtures being of an elaborate design are of chain suspended type. The bowls are of an opaque material, the light being reflected upon the ceiling and then into the auditorium.

The theatre is heated by steam which is being used, having been installed by the American Heating Company.

The seating capacity of this theatre is 1,000; leather upholstered chairs were furnished by the American Seating Company of Chicago.

Front of the U. S. Theatre, 195th Street and Webster Avenue, New York City

The projection room located above the lobby and foyer of the theatre contains two Powers 6A machines which are used in conjunction with a motor generator set. A motor film rewinder is used, this permitting the operator to devote all his time to projection. H. C. Edwards, a man of vast experience, has charge of the projection room. The length of throw is 115 feet, the angle at which the picture is projected is slight, as the port-holes in the booth are nearly on the same level with the screen.

Music most suitable for the picture being shown is furnished by a 4 Manual Pipe Organ, this organ having been installed by the Karr, Warren Organ Company.

Photographs which will appear in a later issue of Motion Picture News will give a clear idea of the height of attractiveness that has been achieved by the management of the Rex in both the exterior and interior decorations. The brilliant electric sign and the spacious lobby, equally well lighted, give an atmosphere of cheer that the passerby, and even the person at a distance, cannot fail to accept as an invitation. In addition, the poster frames and other lobby fixtures succeed in combining good taste with forceful advertising to a remarkable degree.

V-L-S-E, General Film Company service and other productions of producers of high-class pictures are used, six reels being shown at each performance.

Mr. Deweer advertises his program in the daily papers, on billboards and a large mailing list is maintained.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

CALIFORNIA

ONE of the most important realty transaction of recent date was the sale of the northeast corner of Pico street and Lake avenue, Los Angeles, to the Metzler Investment Company by S. R. Smith for a consideration of $100,000, the Edwards & Wildey Company handling the deal.

The property acquired has a frontage of 104 feet on Pico street, 191 feet on Lake, the corner 54 feet being improved with a two-story brick building of seven stores, apartments above, a motion picture theatre occupying the adjoining 50 feet, with seating capacity of 700. Milton Metzler, manager of the Investment company bearing his name, states that his new holdings are to be greatly improved, the scheme including the installation of a fine lighting system for the street and block.

INDIANA

John McFall, a wealthy retired farmer, who owns the ground on which the Varieties theatre stands, at Eighth and Wabash avenues, Terre Haute, has leased it to the Bankers and Merchants Theatre Company of Chicago, to become effective April 1. The new lessee controls the Orpheum theatre at Ft. Wayne, and is said to own a theatre at Hammond. The company was organized by Albert Brentlinger, formerly proprietor of the Orpheum theatre here, and the negotiations for the McFall lease were conducted by him.

KANSAS

A new motion picture theatre for Topeka is promised by Charles D. Harden, manager of the Metro exchange in Kansas City, Mo. Mr. Harden recently said that he would build a fire-proof modern show house in the uptown district and that it would be some theatre when finished.

"Just wait until you see what I am going to do," he said. "There are towns of 1,000 population in this state that have far better shows than Topeka, simply because they have better buildings and equipment. Any film is a good one if it is exhibited right."

Just where the new structure is going to be located was not mentioned by Mr. Harden, but he said that any location near Eighth and Kansas avenue would be suited to his purposes.

KENTUCKY

A new motion picture theatre is about to be built at Newport, Ky., across the river from Cincinnati, to seat 1,000 persons. Newport is a city of about 35,000 inhabitants and now has four picture houses—the Temple, Hippodrome, Lyric and Colonial. Statistics on attendance at these four theatres show than an average of 3,700 persons see the shows every night. Every week the attendance amounts to about 35,000. The four theatres are under the management of a syndicate headed by I. Frankel, who controls several picture theatres in Cincinnati.

LOUISIANA

The new Strand Theatre in course of erection is fast being pushed toward completion, and Triangle pictures are to be offered. The building at the corner of Baronne and Gravier streets will be modern and up-to-date in every respect. E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement interests under whose auspices the theatre will be conducted expects to make a definite announcement in a few days as to the date of opening.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

E. J. Timms of Langley Prairie, B. C. was a visitor in Vancouver recently. Mr. Timms is building a new theatre and advises that everything is going along nicely. He will open with Universal service.

QUEBEC

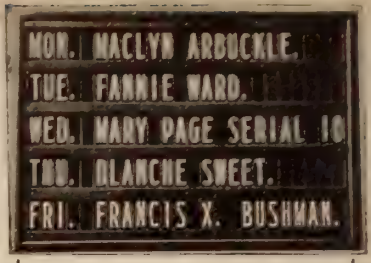
Montreal will have a new motion picture theatre shortly. It is to be erected on the site of the London which is now being demolished. The new house will be operated by the Holman Theatres, Limited, and will be opened to the public on Easter Sunday. The seating capacity will be 1,200, seating 750 on the main floor and 450 in the balcony.

The screen is to be placed immediately inside the main entrances, which will be on either side of the screen, so that people entering will be lighted to their seats by the rays from the screen. An ice cooled ventilation system will add to the comfort of the patrons.

It is state that the front of the new house, which is to be known as the "Holman," will be the most pretentious and ornate in the Dominion. Mr. George Rotsky, who has had such success with the New Grand Theatre, will also manage the Holman.

MONTANA

The American Theatre and the new house now being erected by the Silver Bow Amusement Company at Butte have both placed orders with the Minusa Cine Products Company for Minusa Gold Fibre screens. These are two of the finest theatres in that part of the country.



The Silver Bow Amusement Company is under the able management of Messrs. Jensen and VonHerberg, who have made such a success in Seattle photoplay circles. They are building a magnificent house and it is quite a feather in the cap of Minusa to land it as well as the American Theatre for their superior screen surface.

NEW YORK

The village of Dobbs Ferry is to have a motion picture theatre at last. It will be located on Main street, in the building formerly occupied by Hill Henry as a blacksmith shop. Mrs. F. Q. Brown, the owner of the property, who has recently had the exterior of the building put in excellent shape, intends to spend considerable money on the interior of the building and make it an up-to-date house. Architect James C. Mackenzie is now working on plans toward this end and the work will start immediately. S. E. Koedel, who was for some time connected with the Strand Theatre, New York City, is the lessee of the building, and intends to give the people of this village the very newest in moving pictures. Mr. Koedel has managed successfully the Auditorium Theatre in Irvington, and feels that he can make a sucess of a theatre of that kind here.

PENNSYLVANIA

Oliver H. Gernert and Dr. Benjamin Stuckert announced a few days ago that they would erect a modern motion picture theatre in Allentown, which would represent an investment of approximately $110,000.

If You Could See

the revolutionary electric signs being manufactured by RAWSON & EVANS, you would buy one. We know they are just what you are looking for, because every exhibitor who has seen them is boosting them. They are greatly increasing attendance at motion picture theatres everywhere they are used, as actual box-office receipts prove.

The patented principle of these signs overcomes every objection ever raised against the ordinary electric sign. Just write your name on the margin of this page, mail it to us, and we'll send full details and prices. Please do it now.

In the Long Run, Superior Merit Always Tells

For this reason, the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE is the "eventual" SCREEN. As the pioneer in its field, it early attracted attention and since then, steadily and surely, it has been going along until RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS have become synonomous with perfect projection.

→Radium Gold Fibre Screen

Exhibitors the country over have been telling each other of the wonderful results which they have been getting through the use of the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. They are saving money in electrical current bills, showing their patrons clearer and more "human" pictures, and profiting at the boxoffice through the reputation for "perfect projection" which they have built up.

There is no Theatre too Large or too Small to Profit by the use of a Radium Gold Fibre Screen

"The Horn o' Plenty" FREE

Write Today and Learn How This Machine Makes $600 to $3000 Yearly Profits From a Space 2x2 Feet

This famous Butter-Kist Peanut Toaster is a high-class dignified addition to any theatre or store. Why not make two profits from a big per cent of the people who come to your playhouse?

Men who get this machine are permitted to sell these peanuts in the advertised Butter-Kist "Horn o' Plenty"—the famous cone-shaped bag that holds the usual amount yet looks just twice as big. We control this patented container that is putting all other peanuts in the shade.

Butter-Kist Peanut Toaster

Handsome golden oak cabinet beautifies your theatre. Motion of tumbling toasting peanuts makes people stop and look; appetizing fragrance makes them buy. Toasty flavor brings them back for more.

One man in small town writes, "Peanut sales are double what they used to be." Another—name on request—says, "Sales $1622.50 in eight and one-half months from Butter-Kist Peanut Toaster." Our sensational circular, "The Horn o' Plenty," gives full details and proof of profits.

Revolving Toaster has capacity of 95 cents per hour net profit.

Running two hours per day only would mean almost $700 a year profit.

Pays 300 per cent on your investment.

If you made only thirty-eight 5-cent sales a day you would make $87 per square foot of floor space given to machine.

This is only one-tenth of the capacity of the machine for normal working day.

One single man, Adolph Zukor, shows what can be done to make the moving picture serious and command respect and attention. Mr Zukor has presented Sarah Bernhardt in moving pictures, and we are informed that he has contracted with Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, with Sothern and Marlowe, William Faversham, and Viola Allen and other important actors for their work.

To put such features into moving pictures is to increase their usefulness, and we congratulate Mr. Zukor, whom we have never seen and had never heard of until the announcement was made of his extensive plans.

Such a play as Ben Hur, which is for grown up people [illegible]dren a wonderful lesson in history and in morals, would h[illegible] a[illegible] [illegible]st public value if it could be put before tens of [illegible] useful. We hope that Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger, and Mr. Zukor, who appears to be something of a moving picture monarch, and the others interested will devote thought and the expenditure of money to the preparation of educational moving pictures to be shown in public schools—there is the GREAT opportunity.

"The Girl Philippa"

Captivates Chicago As She Did New York

Production a Triumph At The Ziegfeld

Notwithstanding the world's record of business established by "The Girl Philippa" at The Rialto, New York, the Chicago triumph is even more remarkable when it is considered that the worst blizzard Chicago has known since 1912, coming on the opening days of the run, served only to whet the enthusiasm of the crowds that stormed the Ziegfeld Theatre.

While theatres all through the city reported a total stagnation of business, due to the blizzard, over a thousand of the social, business and civic leaders of the city, attended a private showing on Friday night, February 2nd. On Saturday the run opened to the public, with prices at 50 cents and $1.00, to audiences in size and enthusiasm excelling all past experiences of the Ziegfeld Theatre.

Chicago Newspapers Unanimous in Their Praise

The Chicago American said:

"'THE GIRL PHILIPPA' A FILM INSURING THE SCREEN INDUSTRY"

"The photoplay is a success—an eight-reel motion picture classic—one which will insure the screen in its permanency as a great factor in entertaining the American public."

The Chicago Herald said:

"The cold wave did its best last night to spoil the premiere, but the large number who were brave enough to brave the biting blast, were agreed that the cause justified leaving their cozy firesides. . . . Exhibitors have much to look forward to in 'The Girl Philippa.'"

The Chicago Examiner said:

"'THE GIRL PHILIPPA' THE HEIGHT OF FILM ART"

"Not even a subzero lakeside gale kept its premiere from being the talk of the town's smart set. The audience was probably the most representative ever gathered for a private showing of a motion picture. Past successes of the artistic Anita Stewart are overcast by this, her latest. Her 'Philippa' touches the zenith of what we may expect in screen histrionics. She appeals irresistibly."

The Overwhelming Success of "The Girl Philippa" Wherever It Has Been Shown Proves It The Big Money Maker of the Year.

February 7th, 1917.

To the Exhibitors of the World,

Gentlemen:-

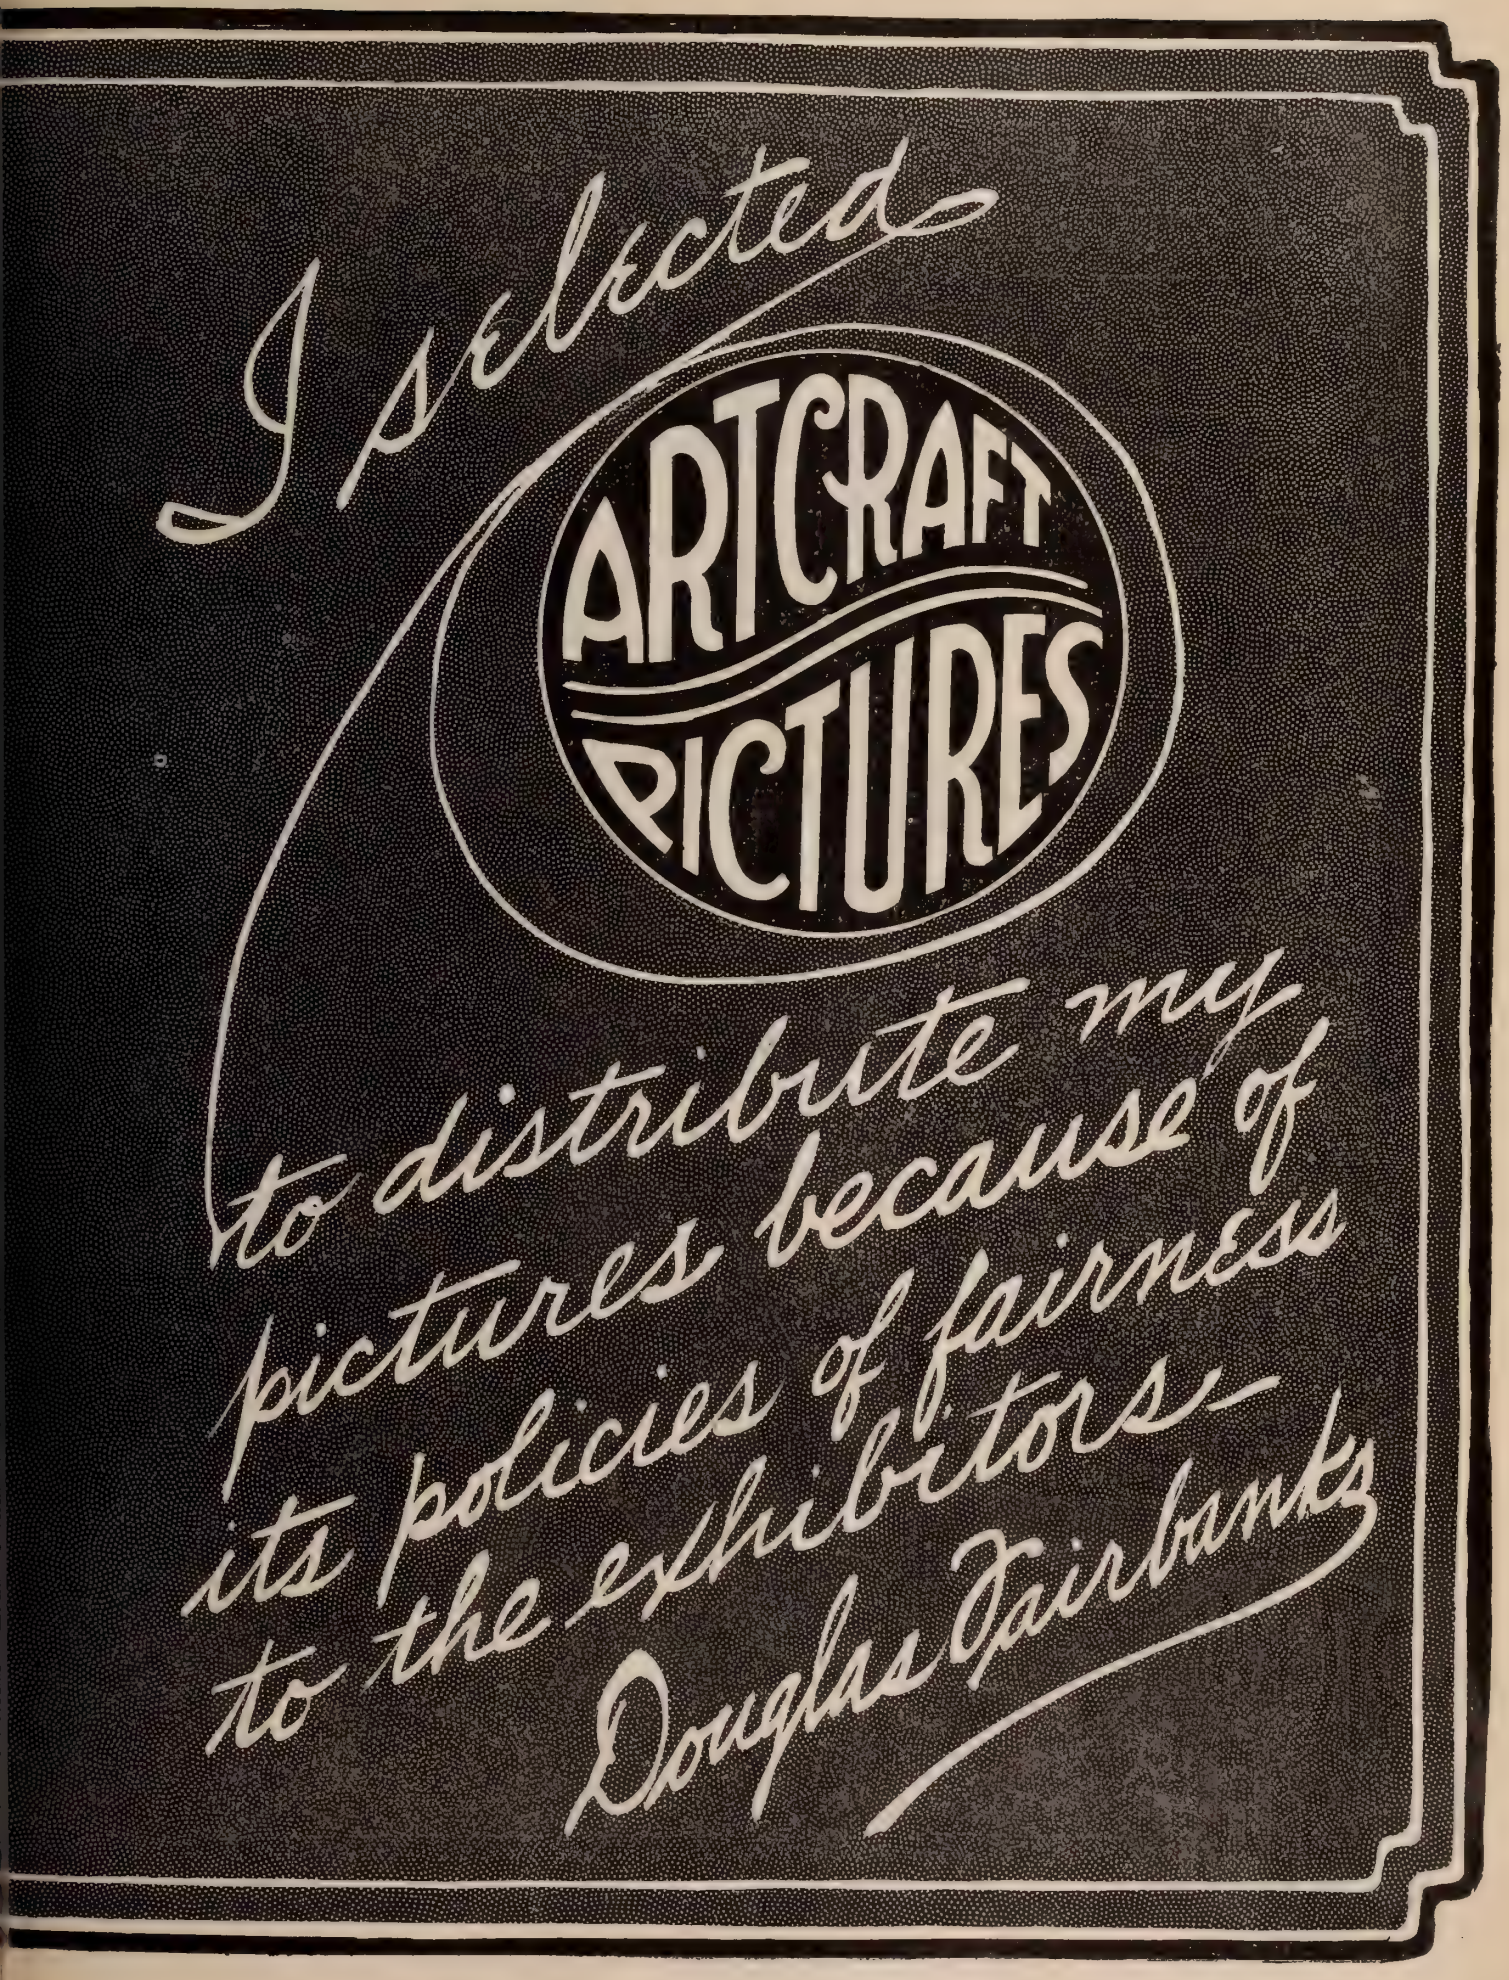
In the future, the photoplays in which Mr. Douglas Fairbanks will appear will be released by Artcraft Pictures Corporation in the United States and throughout the world.

It is but natural that I personally should feel deeply gratified at this arrangement.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation was founded for the express purpose of distributing and exploiting photoplay productions that are in universal demand. Many exhibitors because of program affiliations have been denied some of the greatest and most popular attractions. Artcraft is the medium that knows no favorites.

Through such methods of service it has been possible for you to exhibit the Mary Pickford pictures and to arrange for the showing of the nearly completed George M. Cohan picture, "Broadway Jones".

Mr. Fairbanks in selecting Artcraft for the distribution of his new productions says he does so because of its policies of fairness to exhibitors.



I assured him and reiterate the promise to you, that such confidence is not misplaced.

Sincerely yours,

Walter E. Greene.

President.

"GENTLE INTRUDER" NEW MINTER-MUTUAL ISSUED THIS WEEK

"THE Gentle Intruder," sixth of the Mary Miles Minter-Mutual Photoplays, is released the week of February 19. It is in five acts. It was directed by James Kirkwood at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc. Bookings can be made now at any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges.

Is Willed a Fortune.

Dainty Mary Miles Minter is cast in the role of Sylvia Merton, who is willed a fortune. Sylvia, a sweet faced little girl, goes to live in the home of the man who robs her of her inheritance. She isn't aware that she has been wronged. The man carefully conceals from his family the fact that his fortune is in reality Sylvia's. For a time pretty Sylvia is looked upon as an intruder in her new home. Eventually, however, she comes into her own. The unfolding of the story is most capably managed. It will hold audiences spellbound. A splendid cast assists Miss Minter throughout the production. "The Gentle Intruder" is the sixth of the Minter-Mutual Photoplays. The others, now playing, are "Youth's Endearing Charm," "Dulcie's Adventure," "Faith," "A Dream or Two Ago," and "The Innocence of Lizette." All are available at all Mutual Exchanges.

"Easy Street" Sets New Chaplin Record

"Easy Street," the newest of the Chaplin-Mutual Specials, is setting new records for even such popular releases as Chaplin subjects have proven. Every theatre running "Easy Street" has reported satisfactory business. "The best Chaplin yet," writes one exhibitor; "my audiences roared with laughter when they weren't pop-eyed in amazement at the remarkable 'stunts' performed. Just how it is possible to get hit on the head with a red-hot stove tossed from a third story window and survive is a problem that simply staggered them." "Easy street" is already more famous than Fifth Avenue, Wall Street, Riverside Drive, State Street, Pall Mall, Unter Den Linden and the Champs de Elysee put together.

"Turn away" business is being done at practically every theatre running the sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky." To date the bookings on this subject have been phenomenal and they are still pouring into Mutual Exchanges.

MANY GREAT AUTHORS FOR MUTUAL PLAYS

Gertrude Atherton, Algernon Boyesen, Ibsen, Dickens and Frederick Arnold Kummer

The foremost writers of the land, it was announced, were to furnish the material for Mutual Photoplays. That announcement was made weeks ago. It was based on arrangements which had been effected with novelists of national reputation. Now Mutual is able to announce specific works of certain writers which are already completed in photoplay form, or now in course of production.

"Mrs. Balfame," an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's novel of the same title, has been completed at the studios of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation. Nance O'Neil is the star of this O'Neil-Mutual Photoplay. It is the first Gertrude Atherton story ever filmed. Miss O'Neil is now working in "Hedda Gabler." This is a picturization of the Ibsen play of that name in which Miss O'Neil starred for years on the speaking stage. "Bleak House," the third of Miss O'Neil's productions, was penned by Charles Dickens. It is one of his most famous stories.

Algernon Boyesen's famous play, "The Greater Woman," is the first Marjorie Rambeau-Mutual Photoplay. It is a story of big climaxes—tense moments—powerful emotional scenes. "Motherhood," the second Rambeau-Mutual Photoplay, is from the pen of Frederick Arnold Kummer, famous American novelist. "The Second Wife," another Rambeau production, was specially written for Miss Rambeau by Caroline I. Hibbard. Another Ibsen play—"The Doll's House"—is known the world over. It will be a forthcoming Rambeau-Mutual Photoplay. Reservations on these Photoplays can be made now at Mutual Exchanges.

WILLIAM RUSSELL TO BE PRESENTED IN NEW MUTUAL SERIES

WILLIAM RUSSELL has signed a new contract with the American Film Company, Inc. He is already at work on a new series of William Russell-Mutual Photoplays. The new series, the first two productions of which are already completed and scheduled for release in the near future, will set new records for elaborateness and attention to detail. William Russell is sure to add to the laurels he has already won.

Elaborate Productions.

Unusual pains are being taken with the productions in the new William Russell series of Mutual Photoplays. Neil Shipman, scenario writer of note, novelist and short story writer, has written the manuscript for the first of the new Russell productions. It's title is "My Fighting Gentleman." It is a story of the South and Mr. Russell is provided with some decidedly unusual opportunities for the display of his ability. It is a picture that theatre audiences will talk about for months and months. It is a production that will enhance the reputation of any theatre showing it. "High Play," the second of the William Russell Mutual Photoplays, is also from the pen of a noted writer. It is totally different from "My Fighting Gentleman." An entirely different type of story. But in that, too, Russell rises to tremendous heights.

Box-Office Value.

Exhibitors who have played previous releases starring William Russell know he is a real drawing card. His portrayal of red-blooded roles—his splendid physique—his undoubted good looks—his versatility and unquestioned dramatic skill have made him a popular favorite. The new series will double his popularity. Bookings on the William Russell-Mutual Photoplays can be made at Mutual Film Exchanges now.

Beauty of Ziegfeld "Frolic" In Gaumont Fashion Poses

Sybil Carmen, the fascinating dancer in Florenz Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic," is appearing in fashion poses at the Gaumont studios for the Mutual Weekly. This famous beauty weekly displays the latest frocks, coats, bathing suits, lingerie and other items of feminine wear. Exhibitors can make a special appeal to their women patrons by arranging to show the Mutual Weekly on a certain night each week, and advertising this fashion feature

Announces

WILLIAM RUSSELL

In A New Series of

RUSSELL-MUTUAL PHOTOPLAYS

THIS announcement heralds the coming of a new series of feature photodramas starring the popular favorite, William Russell. It is the intent of the American Film Company, Inc., to present to Exhibitors, in these new productions, a series of plays that should create new standards in the art of cinematography.

These productions will be presented to Exhibitors as Russell-Mutual Photoplays and will be released at stated intervals through all the Exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation in America. The first two plays in this new series are entitled "My Fighting Gentleman" and "High Play" and are already completed. Release dates will be announced soon. Titles and dates of release for other productions in the series will be announced shortly.

The exceptional versatality and dramatic skill of William Russell are well known to Exhibitors everywhere. Combined with these, in this new series, are plays written by competent authors and produced by leading directors. Nothing is being left undone to make these productions deserving of the adjective, "best." Exhibitors are thus assured an extraordinary group of productions in the new Russell-Mutual Photoplays. Reservations for this series are now being made at all Mutual Exchanges.

"The GENTLE INTRUDER"

A fascinating story of a sweet-faced little girl who inherited a vast fortune unknowingly, and lived for years in the home of the man who robbed her of it. How she eventually comes into her legacy is told in a most unusual fashion in "The GENTLE INTRUDER"

Sixth of the Mary Miles Minter-Mutual Photoplays. In five acts. Directed by James Kirkwood. Released the week of February 19th through Mutual Exchanges.

Now Playing:

"YOUTH'S ENDEARING CHARM"
"DULCIE'S ADVENTURE"—"FAITH"
"A DREAM OR TWO AGO"
"THE INNOCENCE OF LIZETTE"

These Minter-Mutual Photoplays can be obtained at any Mutual Exchange.

ARE YOUR BOOKINGS PROFITABLE?

Many times we have heard an exhibitor say: "'So and So' was a good picture but it did not draw at the box-office for me!"

Perhaps you, too, have frequently made the same statement about pictures you played. There was no doubt about the merit of your bookings; yet people did not turn out to see them.

Cub Comedies assure you of pictures which are successful not only from the screen standpoint but from the box-office angle as well. They have merit plus drawing power. This is because the producer studies prevailing likes and dislikes and makes his pictures accordingly—the kind of pictures theatregoers like.

Choose Cub Comedies—the brand of comedies made for your patrons.

Get a GAUMONT ticket for TOURS around the WORLD

When the old man passes in his checks and the heirs get their hands on the yellow boys, what happens? You know; it happens in your town just as it does everywhere else. The widow and the children rush right down to the steamship office and buy a yard or two of tickets. It's human nature to want to go some place. And if you can't go, you like to read about the places and see pictures of them.

Now just let this sink into your thought-factory: You will make big money being a benefactor of every person who enters your theater when you show Gaumont's "Tours Around the World." You show the owner of the yen, the shekel, and the mazuma just where they can plant them abroad, and you show us poor stay-at-homes the places from which our rich relatives send us post cards. Just take a slant at the ticket down the left-hand side of this page. It shows a few of the places to which you can travel NOW with Gaumont. Any Mutual Branch will map out your tour for you. Once a week you can take your patrons on an "arm-chair journey to foreign lands." They will come back for more the next week, and every week. This reel, is not a "filler;" it's a one-reel "feature."

Toot! Toot! The whistle's blowing. Get aboard NOW and book your theater for the season.

Gentlemen:-

I thought I would drop you a line and tell you how a live wire serial gets across in a live wire house. We advertised Pearl of the Army strong, featuring Pearl White in the cuts because we knew that the serial was good if Pathe released it.

Even at that we underestimated Pearl White's drawing power, for on the first night the crowd was packed to the middle of the street trying to get in to see Pearl. It is an actual fact that almost everyone in the House stood up and cheered for about half a minute when Pearl was introduced on the screen.

On the second night there was a big crowd, too; and now that we have shown the second episode we know that we have booked the biggest magnet of a serial that was ever released.

We are writing you this because we know that you have always booked us good film, and we want to tell you that we appreciate it.

Yours truly,

John F Greulich

How can an advertiser continue advertising? By giving YOU value.

The fundamental fault with pictures is the DAILY CHANGE.

It is a double-barreled disturber.

Not only does it militate against the making of good pictures, but it also prevents the advertising of them.

The critics who assail the quality of our weekly releases, on one hand; and on the other, those who criticize the advertising of pictures will have to go deeper than the surface.

They will have to go down to the ruinous daily change policy.

This whole problem, like every big economic problem, runs in the inevitable circle.

LONGER RUNS bring more money back to the producer, enabling him to make better pictures, which pictures make possible longer runs.

And into LONGER RUNS—and only through longer runs—enters advertising, the one great and necessary factor to stop a shrinking public and bring it up to maximum strength.

TO FOREIGN BUYERS

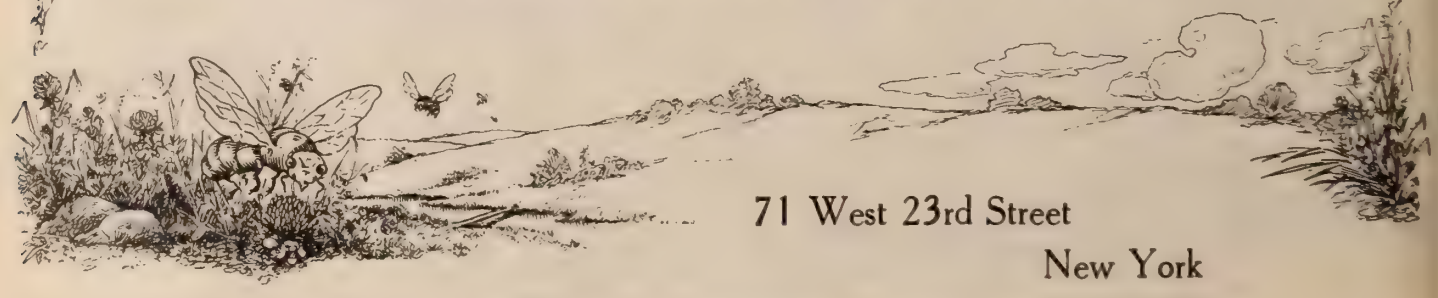
I have acquired the very cream of American features and the program material best adapted to your market.

The subjects and brands set forth in this advertisement are merely samples to show the quality of my stock:—

PARDNERS, by REX BEACH, the leading American fiction writer. The gentle and beautiful personality of Charlotte Walker, one of the most popular legitimate stage stars, pervades and ennobles this virile five reel drama. This production was made by the Edison Co., with many of the well known Edison stars in the supporting cast and cost upward of $30,000 to produce. One of the finest examples of modern photoplay.

WHERE LOVE IS, by WM. J. LOCKE, foremost English author. This preeminent six reel society drama features the vivacious, charming and beautiful Ann Murdock, who is regarded as the greatest motion picture actress developed in the last year. The production cost $33,000, was made by the Edison Co., and a view of it will convince you that, in point of elaborate settings, spirited, excellent acting, fine technique and gripping interest of story, this picture has never been surpassed.

Both PARDNERS and WHERE LOVE IS were purchased from me and have already been scheduled for release in this country by one of our biggest distributing concerns, and the fact that they have more than doubled their advertising on these subjects is an ample testimonial of merit.



DAVID HORSLEY'S five reel productions featuring CRANE WILBUR—one of the most popular stars the world over. These productions have long been the leading sellers on the Mutual Program. Twelve now ready with one each month to follow.

CUB COMEDIES, featuring the inimitable GEORGE OVEY, universally recognized as the best comedies on the market today, next to Charlie Chaplin. These one reel fun makers have long been in the front rank of best sellers and are in great demand abroad. One each week.

I have the exclusive foreign rights to all of these subjects and brands and many more of similar quality. The CHAPLIN-MUTUAL series is still open for a few foreign territories—quick action necessary.

I do not deal in second hand film or cheap trash, and can give you prompt service, thorough satisfaction and references which run back to the early days of motion pictures, in association with the greatest companies and biggest men the industry has ever known.

Gentlemen: To the best of our knowledge, this was the best serial ever booked in this theatre. During the six months we have had the PEOPLE'S, our biggest business for any one night was done when we showed the first chapter of "Gloria's Romance." Since that time we could count on our biggest night being "Romance" night. The title gets a hand every time it goes on the screen, and the best people in town are the ones who have not missed a single episode. Allow us the privilege of thanking you for giving us the opportunity to book it.

Manager Linn's letter is evidence of the tremendous success of Gloria's Romance—the Kleine masterpiece featuring the star supreme, Billie Burke. In the small towns and the big cities Gloria's Romance is showing to packed houses. Thousands of people who ordinarily do not patronize picture theatres are enthusiastic followers of this great motion picture classic. Billie Burke in Gloria's Romance is without a rival. Magnificent scenery, gorgeous costumes, an all-star cast and wonderful photography stamp this feature far above all others. No matter what the capacity of your house, you can pack it to the limit with Gloria's Romance. Twenty chapters—a new chapter each week. FILM STARS AT THEIR BEST IN 'GREAT SECRET'

From whatever direction the wind of photo-play popularity has blown it has proven beyond peradventure of a doubt that "The Great Secret," Metro's new serial, with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne as stars, is the greatest screen novel of the century and has established a high-water mark in motion picture excellence.

"The Great Secret" furnishes the first opportunity for these popular screen favorites in serial drama. For the first time in his remarkable career, Mr. Bushman acts a variety of roles. He is seen as a wealthy man-about-town, a trained athlete, an East Side tough, a longshoreman and a Chinaman.

This is similarly true of Miss Bayne, who, as Beverly Clarke, gives the finest performance of her screen career.

Mr. Exhibitor:

We have been releasing pictures for about one year. Since the very start our pictures have always been of the highest type, the kind that first-class exhibitors have been looking for. We have watched this demand and have followed it out in producing.

We are showing our Scenics and Educationals in practically every first-class theatre in the country. Newspapers extend to our pictures the highest praise possible, devoting more space editorially to praise our subjects than the features.

In addition to the Robert C. Bruce American adventure pictures, we are releasing the famous Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature," Animal Pictures that are now running at the Strand Theatre, New York, and have for the past five months and will continue to run.

Book these at the following exchanges; they will strengthen your program, and attract more attention than the so-called big features.

Make'em Laugh
—Make 'em All Laugh!

That's the trick, and it is up to you to book the comedies that will turn it. You will always get the people if you do. Everybody wants a good laugh.

Producers know this, and try to produce that kind, but how often do they fill the bill? They turn out some that make some people laugh some of the time. More often they produce those that don't make anyone laugh any time. Once in a while they hit the nail on the head and produce one that will make anybody laugh any time. That's the one you ought to have, if you can get it.

Ebony Comedies Are That Kind

When you want a comedy that will make anybody laugh any time—book an Ebony.

Ebony productions are something different. Actors are Negroes —just plain colored folks. If you know anything about these people, you must admit they are funny—funniest people in the world—they bring a laugh when no others can. They are natural comedians, full of innate humor and pantomime, which enables them to portray comedy as no one else can. Ebony comedies will help you build up a reputation for exhibiting the best in comedy photo-plays. They are new and will get the people immediately. All will like them. Everyone is a big laugh. Book one you will want them all. They get better as we go along. The best are yet to come. The first is:

Shopping for Service

AN exhibitor surprised us, last week, with the flat statement that he didn't choose a program for the quality or price of its pictures, but for the service it offered.

Pictures do vary, he admits.

A few stars are decidedly above others as box-office attractions; and every so often a picture is so far above the average that it deserves to be called a super-production.

"But," to quote his own words, "an unprejudiced inspection of the features being released by the major organizations today forces the conviction that insofar as actual quality is concerned there exists but little difference."

HE speaks, he makes emphatic, for the year's output of any program, viewed as a whole; and he speaks for the exhibitor as a whole, for the "common or garden variety" of house which makes up the main fabric of the exhibitor business.

"During the past two years," by his own statement, "I have, at some time or another, shown the features of every organization worth while in the business.

"I have advertised them equally and presented them under the same favorable conditions; and I defy anyone, who analyzes my box-office statements for one year, to discover any real difference—except in the occasional event of unusual pictures or particular stars."

Price is not a factor, he claims.

Price-cutting he contends is the exception today—certainly not a factor with the exhibitor who knows his business.

"IN two years," he states, "using ten different programs, there hasn't been a variation of ten per cent in my feature costs."

So today he goes shopping for service.

Service he comprehends as follows:

(1) Condition of film—of extreme importance.
(2) Return express charges.
(3) Absence of filler reels, necessitating extra expense, expressage and the risk of unsatisfactory subjects.
(4) Unfair methods on the part of exchanges where exhibitor competition is keen and destructive.
(5) Poor pictures forced upon the exhibitor at high prices to make good the producer's own mistakes, and wild efforts to be spectacular.
(6) Misleading advertisements, forcing the exhibitor to mislead, in turn, his public.
(7) Poor advertising aids, and the high cost of this inadequate service.
(8) Discourteous attention to correspondence.

PERHAPS this exhibitor overstates his case to score his point; perhaps his assertions are wide open to argument.

But we can't keep feeling a profound respect for the point he makes:

"The distributing organization which first looks in the future and realizes that in the ultimate the fate of the whole industry hinges upon the success of the exhibitors, individually and collectively, and makes systematic use of that knowledge is going to lead all competitors in the inevitable struggle for business—which struggle is now impending."

Copyright, 1917, by Motion Picture News, Inc.

Speaking Editorially:

Quick Poison

WE are asked by exhibitors right along to comment upon the press sheets sent to them. One, we have right before us, gives as fine a batch of downright lies as one could diligently invent.

We would like to ask what earthly good it does to fool the exhibitor so he can fool the public?

Why attempt it every week—even twice?

What confidence can the exhibitor have in the house and its product—after reading such a press sheet right along?

What on earth is the object in sending out such an open faced fraud?

Is it an aid? To whom?

Frankly this sort of alleged help for the exhibitor and so called advertising for the producer isn't even slow poison—it's quick poison for the business of both.

The British Market and the State Tax

IN the House of Lords last week, Earl Curzon, after announcing that the Government was meeting the new submarine peril by developing inventions for the discovery and destruction of U-boats and by organizing sea lanes of safety for neutral ships, warned the country that it must expect early restrictions of imports and consumption of commodities of a drastic character.

This sounds very much to the point so far as American film imports are concerned.

It might be a very good idea for someone to explain to the investigating committee the value of the British market to American producers as one big reason why a state tax at this time is altogether preposterous and unbearable.

Let the Little Houses Speak

WHY not call to the stand in New York's tax investigation some of the owners of small up-state picture houses?

Eighty per cent. of the picture theatres of the state are small houses.

If a theatre tax is levied—though we cannot imagine that such an uncalled for action will possibly be recommended, these small houses will bear the bulk of the burden.

Let them have some voice in the matter. They can give some interesting and astounding figures on the popular notion of motion picture profits.

Those Who Do and Who Don't

A WRITER in the New York Globe said recently, "People are divided into two classes—those who like motion pictures and those who don't."

"Those who do may, too, be divided into two classes—those who go because they want to see pictures and those who go because they think they have nothing else to do."

The latter class is a risky one to bank upon—they may find something better to do anytime.

The future of the motion picture depends upon making the second class—it is a millionfold—want to go to pictures, by making pictures they will want to see.

The Public Speaks

HERE are some sage pointers to producers, from one of the public. Who will read and follow them?

"1 We want stories that are clean and have something to them as stories. We not only think too many sex plays are bad for us, especially in the hands of a poor director, but we are really tired of them, we don't approve of vampire women nor of vampire men either.

"2 We want to know more about the plays we are going to see—advertising that is enlightening, we would like to be able to tell in advance which are suitable for children and young people to see. Longer runs would help this phase of the question greatly.

"3 We want clean comedy. We do not object to slap-stick if it is clean. Why spoil funniness by little suggestions of vulgarity?"

From one of the public—yes, but so practical and sane it is that it sounds to us as though the public were speaking with one voice.

"It Doesn't Take Brains"

WE are very much inclined to question the statement made before the investigating committee that "It doesn't take brains to make money in the picture business."

Making money we take to be more or less a continuous process, based, as another witness pointed out, upon a small, steady constructive stand and followed by several years' work at eighteen hours per day.

You can make money quickly, of course, now and then, in any business. You play your money on the lucky number—and you win.

It's done frequently in Wall Street—without brains.

The man who gave the testimony has brains—so we don't believe he means it. We believe, in fact, that the picture industry needs brains today more than anything else.

Pictures and Ford Cars

AN exhibitor suggests "vehicle" as another word to be discarded from the film vocabulary—along with "real" and "feature."

Better still, he urges, discard that which the word now represents.

"The vehicle evil gets worse daily," he writes. "If we must provide vehicles for stars, let's at least run the gamut from velocipedes to aeroplanes. Just because a certain type of roadster harmonizes with a particular star's temperament—that doesn't justify its constant use month after month.

"Brother Ford's jitneys are all alike; but pictures ought not to be and can't afford to be."

Another Prize Winner

The Pennsylvania Board ordered the following elimination from the recent release "God of Little Children."

The vision in question was a reproduction of The Madonna and the Child.

Ochs and Trigger in Stormy Row at League Meeting

Difference of Five Thousand Dollars in Statements as to Condition of Local's Treasury Cause of Exciting Meeting—Newspaper Men Barred While Ochs Explains Chicago Trip

New York City's exhibitors, members of the Manhattan, Bronx and Brooklyn locals, staged a Lee Ochs grilling recently at the meeting rooms of Local No. 1. With questions regarding the reasons for the recent Chicago conference of the Executive Committee and pertinent questions regarding the shrinking of the funds in the treasury filling the air, the meeting had a timely war atmosphere.

The big moment of the session came when Samuel Trigger, head of the New York Local, called for an explanation as to the mysterious manner in which the treasury funds had shrunk from the eight thousand dollars, declared to be in it when the change in administrations came, to the less than three thousand which he says it actually contains. National President Ochs, former head of the New York Local, seemed to take the statement as a personal affront, and was vigorous in his denials that his supporters had erred in their enthusiastic declarations that the Local's wealth totaled eight thousand dollars.

The meeting, in President Ochs's own words, was evidently called for the purpose of expelling the National President. Just when the session was warming up to a real interesting point it was decided to exclude the newspaper men. Ochs shed his gloves then and declared that the move to expel him was in furtherance of Samuel Trigger's personal ambitions to head the National League. Adroitly meeting the volleys of questions the National President manœvred the meeting into a wordy talk-fest and adjournment was reached without any action being taken. There is talk of a special meeting later on attended by the members of the three Locals.

The official statement, issued to the press following the meeting, stated that the only action taken was the adoption of a resolution supporting Lee Ochs in the actions of the recent Chicago meeting of the Executive Committee. Samuel Trigger declared that he would issue a statement during the coming week which would make particular reference to the action of the Ochs committee in taking from Louis Frank the management of the coming National Convention.

The meeting opened with an air of unrest pervading the meeting room at 218 West 42nd Street. Following the calling of the meeting to order President Samuel Trigger took the floor and exploded his bombshell.

"It's about time," he declared, "that we did away with this pettifogging and cleared the atmosphere so that you members know the exact condition of Local No. 1. A statement was made shortly after the change in administration of this local that there was $8,000 in the treasury. That statement is wrong; there isn't eight thousand, there isn't six or seven, there is less than three thousand in our treasury funds. It's about time you boys knew this and time that something was done about it."

At this point Lee Ochs sprang to the floor, his face choleric with anger. When he had succeeded in mastering his feelings he shouted: "You want to be pretty careful about making statements like that. There was eight thousand dollars in the treasury when we turned it over to the new officers, and that settles it. Not only the officers and proper committees, but a firm of certified auditors checked up on all the accounts. If there isn't eight thousand in the treasury as they found then it is up to some one else to say where it has gone to."

It was at this point that some of the members decided that revelations were apt to come too thick and fast for outside ears and it was decided to rule the representatives of the press out of the balance of the session.

Following the exit march of the newspaper men Ochs's opponents went to the fray hot and heavy. The grilling soon had the National President on the defensive and he took the floor to shout:

"You fellows all received notice to attend this meeting because some canned goods was going to be opened—meaning that I was going to be canned. I'm telling you this now just to show you up—and I'm telling you that you can't do it. If you expel me I suppose you'll have to go right on and expel the Executive Committee. Let me see you do it."

President Wilson Offered Aid of Film Men

The following telegram has been sent to President Wilson, in which the screens of the nation are offered for his use in propaganda purposes in case of war:

Woodrow Wilson,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

The undersigned representing varied motion picture interests, unite in pledging to you their combined support for the defense of our country and its interests. There is no greater creator of public opinion than the motion picture. Twelve million people in the United States patronize its theatres daily. We would be glad if agreeable to you to form a commission to place the motion picture at your service in the most intelligent and useful manner.

Ochs Oversteps His Authority, Says Choynski

Chicago Exhibitor Resents Lee A. Och's Activities Before National Association in Powers Case—Calls Him "Impudent"

M. A. CHOYNSKI, a prominent Chicago exhibitor, and a member of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, vigorously denounces the activities of Lee A. Ochs, who recently made the bold request that P. A. Powers be asked to resign from the Griffith Censorship Committee.

In a letter addressed to Motion Picture News, Mr. Choynski says:

As a member of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, elected from the floor of the National Convention in Chicago with nine other members to represent the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in said association, I ask the very pertinent question, by what right, what authority Mr. Lee A. Ochs takes it on himself to ask for the resignation or elimination of any one from any committee appointed by the National Association of the M. P. I.?

Are the members elected to represent the Motion Picture League incompetent and incapable of handling all questions coming before their branch, and where does Lee A. Ochs get possessed of the idea it was his special privilege to announce the policies of the exhibitors before the association?

As one of the members I resent his stand, and believe a majority of my fellow-directors would go on record saying he is overstepping his authority and impudent in his presumption.

Yours truly,
M. A. Choynski.

National Association Ready for Railroad Tie-Up

For the second time the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry met last week to consider the possibility of the tying up of film distribution all over the country on account of railroad problems. The first time was on the eve of the expected railroad strike last year, and the present time was with the possibility of war and commandeered railway equipment crippling the express companies.

At the meeting last week, the Transportation Committee discussed the plans for delivering films locally by motor cars working for all the exchanges, through the National Association, and took up the question of using the parcel post for the delivery of films from producers to exchanges, as the mails would be the only shipments which could get through in case of a tieup of the railway equipment with war orders and troops.

Perret Praises Vigor of American Direction

"King of French Directors" States His Views in Interview for Motion Picture News—Has Long Record of Achievement

LEONCE PERRET, the foremost director of motion pictures in Europe, who recently came to America to work for Selznick Pictures, Inc., believes that with all of the vigor which characterizes the American director's viewpoint, his achievements will only reach their maximum when he has learned to incorporate into his technique the many important things which his brother directors of France, Italy and Sweden are in a position to give him.

Leonce Perret's knowledge of English is at present limited to the few expressions which he has acquired since his arrival here last month. Through the aid of an interpreter, Director Perret endeavored to make his points clear.

"In France," he said, "we have long admired the force and the vigor which is revealed in American direction. Their ability to express a dramatic theme convincingly is marvelous. Yet the American must yield to a degree to the practices of the European directors if he will progress to the extent in the future that he has in the past. The finesse of the French, the pictorial sense of the Italian, the sweeping treatment which characterizes the productions of Sweden can be absorbed to excellent advantage by the American director."

Leonce Perret at present is working in the Selznick studio on "The Court of St. Simon." His record in France, where he is known as "the king of directors," is long and enlightening.

His first great work in the Gaumont studios was "The Life of Moliere." After this, one success followed another in rapid succession until within a few weeks after his arrival in Paris, audiences looked forward to the name of Perret on a program as much as the average theatregoer looked forward to the appearance of his favorite star.

The best known of his successes were "Light and Love," "Graziella," "The Ransom of Happiness," "Manine, the Actor's Wife," "The Romance of a Middy," "By Love," and "The Child of Paris," all of which were shown in America with great success.

The last mentioned was perhaps his greatest success, no less than 280 reproductions being sent throughout Europe.

Since the beginning of the hostilities in Europe, Leonce Perret has produced seventeen features, several relating to the war, all of them having been shown at the Gaumont Palace, which seats every evening six thousand people. Here are a few names: "The Hero of the Yser," "A Page of Victory," "Stand up Dead Soldiers!" "The Angelus of Victory," "Godmothers of France," "Duty!" "The Beauty with the Golden Hair," "The Slave of Phydias," "The Riddle of the Riviera," "The Last Love" and "The Black X." Besides, during the same period he has produced a dozen or more, one and two-reel society comedies.

It was Perret who brought to world-wide attention such reknown stars as Valentine Petit, Suzanne Grandis, Yvette Andreyor, Fabienne Fabreges, Suzanne Debrais, who have been presented on all the screens of Europe, America, Japan and Australia.

In his career he has made over 500,000 feet of released negative film, 308 subjects, including comedies, dramas and features from one to ten reels each.

Court Finds Against Alleged War Film Imitators

Illegitimate film practices received a hard blow recently when Justice Hendrick, in the Supreme Court of New York, granted a motion for an injunction pendent lite in favor of the Strand Film Service and The American Correspondent Film Co., co-plaintiffs against the Federal Feature Film Co., of 145 West 45th street.

It is said evidence was offered that the Federal Feature Film Co. has been offering to exhibitors and the public a war picture called "The Battles of a Nation," which is totally different from the feature of the same name produced and copyrighted by The American Correspondent Film Co.

It was also alleged that deceptive advertising methods had caused considerable damage to the business of the Strand Film Service, who control the rights on the original "The Battles of a Nation" in this territory.

The company in the action is a distinct and separate organization from the Federal Feature Films Corporation of New York, with offices in the Times Building.

Capitol's Smart Set to See Farrar Film at $5 a Seat

At the exclusive mansion of Mr. Edson Bradley, "Joan the Woman" is to have its Washington premiere on the night of February 13, before six hundred representative society folks, who have subscribed for seats at $5 each for the occasion. The proceeds are to go to charity.

The patronesses who comprise some of the most notable women at the Capitol, including Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Lars Anderson, Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins, and many others, were in search of some novel form of charity entertainment when one of them suggested "Joan the Woman." Jesse L. Lasky was communicated with and gave his consent, even to sending his orchestra from the 44th Street theatre for the performance.

To Follow Up "Seven Deadly Sins"

So successful has the McClure series "Seven Deadly Sins" been that within a few weeks a new series of similar form will be started according to announcement of Frederick L. Collins, president of the producing concern.

Several of the stars in the present Sins productions will appear in the new pictures, and also according to promise a number of other players with wide reputation.

Big Increase in Demand for Educational Films

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, reports that contracts have been closed with exchanges throughout the country covering all territory for the distribution of the Raymond L. Ditmars series of educational pictures to be released under the general title "The Living Book of Nature."

The following exchanges are handling the pictures: Standard Film Service, Cleveland; Broadway Features Film Company, Detroit; Celebrated Players Film Company, Chicago; Lambson Feature Films, Seattle; Monarch Feature Films, Kansas City; the J. A. Cressey Interests, Dallas; Peerless Feature Film Exchange, Philadelphia; Metro Film Service, Washington, D. C.; Zenith Feature Film Company, Minneapolis; Photoplay Exchange, Salt Lake City.

In speaking of the remarkable amount of business, all done since the announcement, only a month ago, of the Educational contract with Professor Ditmars, Mr. Hammonds said: "It was only a little over a year ago that the Educational Films Corporation started. A year ago we had no representatives in any city in the United States or Canada. We had seven pictures ready for release. Today we plan to release one hundred and four subjects during the coming year, and there is not an exchange territory in which we are not represented."

Freuler Visiting Chaplin to Consult on Terms

The negotiations for Charlie Chaplin's services for another year are on. President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, is in California, ostensibly visiting the Mutual's West Coast studios. Incidentally he is calling on the famous comedian to take up with him completion of arrangements for a new series of Chaplin comedies to follow the series of twelve now being released by the Mutual.

While there is considerable speculation as to the terms of the deal, nothing definite has been given out at the Mutual offices. Mr. Chaplin is now being paid $670,000 for his first year of work under the Mutual banner.

"Little Lost Sister" to Be Filmed by Selig

MOTION picture rights to Virginia Brooks' novel, "Little Lost Sister," has been sold to the Selig Polyscope Company by the Mozart Amusement Company, of which Frank A. P. Gazzolo is the president. "Little Lost Sister" was one of the first big successful novels dealing with while slavery to be written. After appearing serially it was dramatized and later published in book form. The sales of the book reached over a hundred thousand copies.

The play, "Little Lost Sister," has been continuously before the public for the last four years. During that time as many as five different companies have presented the play on tour at one time.

"Abolish Daily Program" Slogan Is Taken Up Nationally

Exhibitors and Exchange Men in All Parts of the Country Voice Enthusiastic Approval of Motion Picture News Campaign to Lengthen Showing of Pictures—Reports Show Increased Profits

THE war cry against waste and extravagance which MOTION PICTURE NEWS has uttered in its campaign to abolish the daily program change has been taken up by the representative exhibitors of all sections of the country. Many exhibitors, spurred by this campaign, have already abolished the daily program change, and in all cases the report has come that the results, from a box office standpoint, have been gratifying.

Exhibitors of Newark, Elizabeth and in fact, all Northern New Jersey have made important changes in the policies of their playhouses during the past month. These changes are significant because they have occurred not as a result of sentiment, but wholly from the standpoint of box office returns. Since the first of the year the Goodwin theatre, one of the most popular and representative of Newark's high-class playhouses, has been showing its feature pictures for the entire week. To-day the Strand theatre, another playhouse of the highest class, announced that beginning with next week it will abandon entirely its vaudeville policy and run strictly to feature films. The Strand's program which will be changed weekly, will consist largely of state rights pictures. Next week "The Birth of a Nation" is scheduled, to be followed by "Intolerance." For the following week the Strand has booked "Joan the Woman."

The tendency to get away from the daily change of program is not confined to Newark. Proctor's Broad Street theatre, Elizabeth, and the United States Garden theatre, of the same city, are now changing their programs only twice each week, where a few months ago the daily change was in operation. That the daily change of program was not productive of the best results must be accepted from the admissions of the local exhibitors.

Last Two Days Best

Mrs. Webbe, manager of the Goodwin, declares that almost, without exception, the last two days of a picture's weekly run are the best. "The last two pictures that enjoyed weekly runs at the Goodwin were 'The Libertine' and 'War Brides,'" explained Mrs. Webbe, "'and the final days' showing of each brought bigger box office receipts than any two of the preceding days. I find that a feature picture that is really a feature picture in something besides name, makes its greatest appeal to the public from those who have had an opportunity to see it. Probably eighty per cent. of Newark's population attend motion picture theatres, or are willing to attend them if convinced that what they seek may be found there. They are convinced of the merits of a picture most readily by the descriptions given by those who have seen it. Therefore, it is only common sense that a daily change of program is depriving the exhibitor of the financial benefits of the very best kind of advertising. Take 'War Brides' for example. I was forced to estimate the attitude of the public toward it not from box office receipts, but from the number I was forced to turn away each night."

Omaha Won Over

The last week has seen two houses in Omaha go to two-day runs for the first time as a regular feature of their week's program. Manager Hugh McCaffery, of the Boulevard, and Manager W. O. Jensen, of the Lothrop, announced that they will show Vitagraph releases twice a week, and these releases will be shown for two days each. If the plan is a success, other pictures shown at these theatres will be for two days.

"It looks like more money to us, that is all," explained Manager Jensen, when asked how he happened to take the step. "I have been reading the fight MOTION PICTURE NEWS is making for longer runs. If it means more money to the exhibitor, every exhibitor should be for it. If it means a higher quality of pictures, every exhibitor should be for it that much stronger. I am certain the longer run will be the motion picture program in the future, just as no legitimate theatre could live by showing a brand new play each night. The legitimate theatre couldn't do it and live; how can the exhibitor?"

Manager Denham Palmer, of the Vitagraph Exchange, claims the honor of having led many exhibitors to see the wisdom of longer runs. "My plan is to induce exhibitors to show our pictures just as long as the size of his town will warrant, and no longer," said Palmer. "We want him to make as much money as he can, we want to make as much as we can, and we want to leave the exhibitor satisfied that our efforts are for his interests.

"For instance, an exhibitor with a theatre in a town of 1,000 has a house of 200 capacity. He fills it, thus showing to twenty per cent. of the population. Should he quit there, with the advantage of all that mouth-to-mouth advertising that is his? No; he should fill his house at least two more times, and if he has a good country patronage, he should fill it again. By giving a matinee in the afternoon and one or two shows a night, it would be simple enough for him to make money, as well as save money, by running the same picture for two days. If he puts on a daily change instead, he cannot accommodate every person in town if they come; his expenses will be greater; he will not make as much money."

Iowa in Line

J. E. Bryant, proprietor of the Plaza, big new theatre at Sioux City, Ia., and the Plaza at Waterloo, Ia., one of the best houses in that city, came out this week as a strong advocate of longer runs. He deplores, however, the fact that there are not more pictures warranting long runs.

"I ran 'Idle Wives' four days," he said, "and if I get another picture as good, I'll run it four days. I run all the Bluebird releases two days; if good, the pictures should be given an opportunity to advertise themselves. When an exhibitor makes daily changes he forfeits this advantage. Good pictures will continue to enjoy long runs at my houses. I make more money on such pictures that I do on others, and, besides, daily changes are what keep an exhibitor from growing fat. They are too much worry and trouble for the profit they bring."

Longnecker & Melcher, proprietors of the Sun, a suburban house in Sioux City, Ia., believe longer runs are growing in popularity as more exhibitors try them. They make a success of longer runs in their house, said Mr. Longnecker. "We only have two-day runs, though," he said. "I look forward to the time when we can give longer runs in our suburban house."

Chattanooga Active

A. S. Dickinson, manager of the Southern Metro Pictures Corporation, with headquarters in Chattanooga, Tenn., is strongly in favor of the abolishment of the daily change of program. "I have written to all one-day exhibitors in middle-class towns to use pictures more than one day," he said. "Abolishing the daily change will be a great saving not only in film rental, but in advertising as well. If the standard made picture is the product of a reputable film company, it is bound to advertise itself."

Howell Graham, pioneer motion picture exhibitor of Chattanooga, and at present manager of the Lyric legitimate and motion picture theatre, in expressing his views with respect to the daily change of program, said: "I am an advocate of the short picture. The tired business man at his noon hour needs recreation, and to drop into a picture show and witness a snappy thirty-minute program rests him and sends him back to his office or place of business rested and imbued with renewed inspiration. To sit through five or six reels would not have the restful effect neither would it clear his mind. The absence of the short programs is felt. The success of the motion picture industry depends, in a large measure, on not overlooking the fact that the business man should not be denied the short, snappy program. I think that the ground work of the industry was based on the short story. The dime is the logical price of admission. Long features that could not be run on the daily change basis find patrons among the night visitors."

Adolph Zukor Goes West for Long Tour

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation left New York on Saturday for an extended tour of the country during which he will make his first visit to the Lasky studio in Hollywood since the merger of the Famous Players and Lasky concerns. On his way West, Mr. Zukor will stop off at Chicago, Kansas City and several other of the principal cities where he will confer with exchange men and exhibitors on important questions incident to production and distribution.

Zukor Denounces Proposed "Sunday Picture"

Protests That Picture Business Must Not Be Changed from Seven-Day Basis—Sunday Plan Gives Too Much Leeway to Unscrupulous Producer

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in a letter addressed to the editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, states that he is strongly opposed to the plan for "Sunday pictures," which was suggested in these columns on January 20 by Frank Rembusch. The letter follows:

Your edition, dated January 20th, contained a suggestion which I believe to be essentially injurious to the motion picture business, though it was undoubtedly made to the NEWS in good faith—the idea of having "Sunday pictures" as against week-day productions. The thing smacks too much of the good old-fashioned idea of the country deacon who was a leading spirit of the church on Sunday and collected his rents from the town dives on Monday. It carries with it the suggestion of being good on Sunday so that you can be as wicked as you please for the rest of the week.

The idea of having pictures that were essentially suitable for Sunday presentation would be all right were it not for the fact that it could be easily used as a cloak for unscrupulous producers to hide behind while they turned out salacious pictures for the other six days in the week. We must remember that the motion picture business, like the public service enterprises, is active 365 days a year. Ours is not a Sunday business or a Monday business, but one which goes on every day of the week—and we must make our pictures for seven days a week not for six days and one day.

A picture that is immoral on Sunday is immoral on Monday. A picture that is clean on Monday is clean on Sunday. Of course there are Biblical subjects that may be more appropriate for Sunday showing than for any other time, but that is not the idea which is behind the suggestion as I understand it.

The partitioning of motion pictures into Sunday and week-day groups would, in my estimation, form the entering wedge for a great deal of hypocrisy on the part of unscrupulous producers.

It is a moral certainty that any such classification of photoplays as has been suggested would be seized upon by insincere producers for the purpose of hiding their undesirable pictures behind the skirts of a "Sunday" photoplay. The old adage, "Let not thy right hand know what they left hand doeth," would be given a practical interpretation that would be disastrous to the welfare of the industry as a whole.

We must never lose sight of the fact that the motion picture industry is beset by a ring of potential grafters, well-meaning reformers, and a horde of busy-bodies who eagerly seize upon every opportunity which is offered them for raising the hue and cry of censorship. Can you imagine a more delightful prospect, from the standpoint of these leaches, than the motion picture industry itself dividing its productions into two classifications—decent and indecent? Public morals are not placed on the shelf six days a week, and inasmuch as these people who are making their drive upon the industry are doing so on the basis of conserving public morals, it is hard to believe that anything more to their liking could be conceived than this proposed voluntary admission that only one-seventh of our weekly output was respectable.

In his desire to start action of some kind, your correspondent of the 20th missed an essential fact and happened upon an unfortunate side issue in failing to reach the root of the evil. Instead of segregating motion pictures according to their alleged morality, let him head a drive against those producers who insist upon turning out essentially vicious pictures. I do not believe that all pictures should be "Snow White's." Sex stories can be, and are handled every day on the screen in a manner that is not offensive to any one with common sense. Furthermore, there is no denying that some of the greatest characters of literature and of the drama and of history, for the matter—are not entirely free from the taint of immortality. But I contend that these great characters and these powerful tales can be handled very discreetly on the screen.

My quarrel is with the man who stages a photoplay purely because it is lurid and for the very frank purpose of exploiting the salacious elements of the picture. Turn your heavy artillery upon him, drive him to a cover—or at least to reformation—and you will have achieved a permanent benefit to the motion picture industry instead of tearing down another barrier between it and the ogre of censorship.

Yours very truly,
ADOLPH ZUKOR.

N. A. M. P. I. to Release Films

The first reel of the All-Star Review of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on "How the Great Stars Make Love," will be ready for distribution by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry next month.

The Review is to be issued in five reels, on five consecutive weeks, and it was recommended by the Executive Committee that the feature be sold on a states right basis, the National Association preparing uniform posters and advertising matter. The five reels have been finally decided upon as follows: "How the Great Stars Make Love," "With the Funny Stars," "Great Fights of the Films," "Daredevil Stunts of the Films," and "Great Moments in Great Plays," this last including tense dramatic situations shown in short footage.

Ohio Passes Griffith's Feature

Ohio exhibitors are planning to shortly show "The Birth of a Nation" which, after the long drawn out litigation lasting three years, has now been O.K'd by the Board of Censorship.

Winnipeg Preacher Praises Pictures

A slashing indictment of the fare provided at certain vaudeville houses in Winnipeg, and the prediction that the day was coming when moving pictures would be in every church and in every household were two of many outstanding points in a sermon which the Rev. W. J. Hindley, a member of the provincial censor appeal board, preached to a congregation of 2,000 at Central Congregational Church Sunday night.

Mr. Hindley's theme was "The challenge of the moving picture to the modern city." One challenge, he said, was to bring to the producer and manager of films a higher conception of their social obligation than the mere making of money—the lifting of managers out of the dollar domain. The other challenge was to the public to support those films which were of an uplifting nature, to leave alone the melodrama and slapstick comedy, and by their co-operation and support help to make the character of the whole business. It was a challenge of co-operation, not of legislation or censorship, and he expressed himself as being absolutely opposed to any new strictures being placed upon the moving picture business in Manitoba.

As to the matter of censorship, he thought the same principle as governed lawyers, doctors, plumbers, etc., should be applied—that the censors should comprise men in the ranks of the profession, whose life and money was in the business, and not disinterested citizens.

J. C. Graham Completes Tour in Canada

J. C. Graham, who was recently engaged by the Famous Payers-Lasky Corporation as general foreign representative, returned from Canada Monday, after completing his first official tour on behalf of that company.

During the course of the trip, which consumed four weeks, Mr. Graham visited the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges in Canada and made a tour of all the principal Canadian cities. Mr. Graham reports that, to his surprise, he found the Canadian motion picture theatres to be doing a tremendous business, apparently unaffected to any great extent by the war. Although the tension throughout Canada is very great, and popular attention is centered upon the war, the motion picture seems to be filling the demand for cheap but universal entertainment.

Levine Leaves Triangle

H. Z. Levine has severed connections with the Triangle Film Corporation, where he has been since that company's inception in August, 1915, to become business manager for the Edward Warren productions, with offices in the Fitzgerald Building, 1482 Broadway. Mr. Levine is one of the "live-wire" publicity and advertising men in the industry. He has served as executive, purchasing agent, editor and advertising manager with some of the largest organizations both in this country and abroad.

Helping the Exhibitor Increase His Box Office Receipts

The Third of a Series of Dollars and Cents Articles by H. C. Holah, Manager of the Motion Picture Department of the Chicago Herald

MR. EXHIBITOR, does your exchange man realize the importance of co-operating with you?

Co-operation between the exchange man and the exhibitor is still in its infancy. The relations between these two factors in the motion picture industry, are but a little removed from the "knock-down and drag-out" policy that marked the birth of the film game. Far-seeing men of the industry have visioned the need for the development of better understanding and mutual helpfulness.

They are bending their energies to removing the misunderstandings and suspicions that imperil the progress of the industry.

The exchange man by virtue of his position as "go-between"—between manufacturer and exhibitor, must aid the exhibitor to sell his public. To that end the exchange man takes advantage of every aid offered him by the manufacturer. Posters, heralds, slides, advertising campaign books—all these aids the exchange man eagerly seizes upon, in his endeavor to help the exhibitor. But somewhere between the exhibitor and the exchange man lies the fatal fault of "lack of co-operation."

Is the exchange man to blame?

Or does the fault lie at the door of the exhibitor?

Many exhibitors are suspicious of suggestions to better his conditions offered by the exchanges, and will pass up the purchase of business pluggers because they feel they cannot afford extra expense on the picture booked. The small sum involved will be multiplied many times in increased box office receipts. These helps are not sold at a profit to the exchange, but are offered at a nominal sum above cost to cover handling.

To reap the fullest benefit of the advertising helps offered by the producer, and exchange man, the exhibitor must use them. Ordinarily the exhibitor is satisfied with the common stereotyped announcements. He should appropriate an impressive sum for newspaper advertising, and utilize the campaign books supplied by the exchange man and made up for that purpose. Many times he fails to look into the co-operative features that his exchange man is eager to extend him. Does he realize that the latest and most effective advertising methods for putting over his individual picture can be found in the files of the exchange man?

In utilizing the many helps offered by the exchange man, the exhibitor is doing two-fold service. Primarily he is interested in selling his public, and can only determine the results through the increased box office receipts.

The producer, exchange man and exhibitor—the three most important factors in the motion picture industry—have the same purpose in common—that of selling the public. The producer considering things from a wider and more comprehensive viewpoint, is vitally interested and realizes the importance of closer co-operation in all branches of the industry. Possessing greater facilities for helping the exhibitor, he is only too desirous of seeing them utilized. He has a staff of artists constantly creating publicity material—preparing new slides—evolving new ideas to appeal to the public. All these things are at the instant call of the exhibitor. They are designed for the purpose of helping him. Especially are these co-operative helps valuable to the small town exhibitor.

The advertising campaign books put out by numerous producers, offer him (the small town exhibitor) the personal services of the highest paid advertising men in the field. The ideas, the copy, the illustrations—all these things are the products of skilled specialists. But few exhibitors are utilizing this service to its most profitable extent.

Greater interest displayed by the exhibitor in helping to promote closer co-operation with the exchange man would create more sincerity and develop confidence. Perhaps in the past difficulties have occurred that have caused you to look with suspicion upon your exchange man. You doubtless have experienced the deplorable "fall down shipment"—in other words, the non-arrival of film—or the substitution for a film originally booked and extensively advertised.

He never hesitates to blame the exchange, but has his fellow exhibitor been as careful to return as promptly his film as he was eager to receive it?

Under the practically universal evil of the daily change, close booking is necessary for profitable distribution. The exchange booker's position is an unenviable one. He is forced repeatedly, due to delayed returns, to make switches on bookings, causing him to become indifferent in handling your account. The booker is handling the accounts of many exhibitors and must take into consideration the minutest details of each and every one. You are one link in the chain of exhibitors to bring about efficient handling of your service. To bring about this condition, you should make your returns promptly. You know train time as well as all transfer points within a radius of one hundred miles from your town. You are better qualified than the exchange booker to regulate the returns from your end. Give these points extra thought and action, it will help to bring your service of prompt film delivery to its proper standard.

¶ The World Exchange in Omaha has received a number of inquiries lately for suggestions of original ways to advertise features. Among other things included in the answer has been the invariable, "We find the 'Live Wire Exhibitors' department in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be very valuable in offering such suggestions, and we recommend it to you."

Schulberg Made General Manager of Paramount

Incorporates Duties as Advertising and Publicity Manager with Those of Office Manager—Kenneth Hodkinson Resigns as Office Manager

BENJAMIN P. SCHULBERG, until a few days ago manager of the publicity and advertising departments of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has taken his seat at the desk in the large glass office of the general manager of the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Kenneth Hodkinson has resigned as office manager of Paramount, and Benjamin Schulberg has resigned as manager of the publicity and advertising departments. All three departments are absorbed in his new capacity as general manager.

To those who have observed Mr. Schulberg's rapid and steady rise close at hand, the announcement does not come as a surprise.

Mr. Schulberg, has probably been associated with fewer companies than any other man who has been in his branch of the business during the same period of time. Mr. Schulberg made his entrance into the film business as associate editor of one of the earliest trade papers, and the first mouthpiece of the "independent" manufacturers, "Film Reports." He joined the Rex Company upon its formation as scenario editor and advertising and publicity manager, remaining with that company until it affiliated with the Universal, when he was transferred to Universal as scenario editor.

When Adolph Zukor organized the Famous Players Film Company in 1912, Mr. Schulberg became identified with that pioneer feature producing company as scenario editor and advertising and publicity manager, until the growth of the company made it necessary for him to devote all his time to the advertising and publicity department.

With the formation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Mr. Schulberg occupied the same position.

Bill for Sunday Shows Debated in Wisconsin

The cities of Wisconsin, outside of Milwaukee, will have moving picture shows on Sunday, if the bill introduced into the Legislature a few days ago is passed. This bill legalizes the exhibition of moving picture shows on Sunday, providing the Common Council of the city in which the shows are given also authorize Sunday exhibitions.

Real Facts the Cure for Tax Threats

Evidence—Move Might Well Be Followed by Other Theatre Men Up-State Exhibitor's Letter to Legislator Places Cold Figures in

THROUGH the courtesy of an up-State exhibitor MOTION PICTURE NEWS is enabled to publish herewith his letter written to the Senator representing his district regarding the proposal to levy taxes on the motion picture industry. The letter is an admirable presentation of the case for the motion picture in opposition to the grasping attempts of politicians who see in the film industry a juicy source of revenue. Similar letters from all exhibitors of the Empire State to their local representatives and giving in each case the particular facts that render taxation an impossibility would go a long way towards halting the move for taxation.

The up-State exhibitor's letter follows:

Senator ——,
Senate Chamber, Albany, N. Y.
Dear Sir:

Every present indication seems to point to increased taxation in this State for the already overburdened and harassed motion picture exhibitor. I earnestly hope to see you lined up against any measure which has for its object the imposition of further taxes upon an already overtaxed industry.

I feel that possibly a few indisputable facts pertinent to this industry might interest you. In the first place, the public prints have it that the main reason for believing that we are on a high tide of prosperity has its origin in the inflated salaries which are at the present time being paid to various stars. Actually, the motion picture business is passing through a siege of depression, and bad business with poor receipts and mounting expenses, and most authorities attribute this serious slump to this same absurd salary situation.

Nevertheless, I am surprised that an intelligent committee should announce this condition as an evidence of great financial prosperity, because it effectually demonstrates a situation closely approximating the antithesis of success.. The wild scramble for celebrities has brought into being a senseless bidding for services which has created a standard of remuneration for stars which is wholly unbalanced and ridiculous. It is a question of competitives strangulation pure and simple, not a sure sign of "money to burn."

The theatre manager represents the market in this industry, and in the end it is he who pays these tremendous salaries, and the results of this particular type of insanity are interesting. Last May there were approximately 17,000 motion picture theatres in active operation. In less than ten months over four thousand, practically twenty-five per cent., were forced to close down, and an astonishingly large percentage of these failures occurred in the same State of New York. Strange, indeed, that a business returning such immense profits should register so many financial shipwrecks. Infantile paralysis was, in a measure, responsible, but this in no way affects the main issue, which is that we are far from prospering.

Reliable statistics to-day state that of every hundred men who invest in motion picture theatres only ten make money, ten "get by" and the remaining eighty fail signally. Hardly a tempting outlook for investors. I firmly believe that of all the men who have large sum tied up in this business to-day more than fifty per cent. are one with me in that they would gladly get out immediately if such a course were possible without entailing the loss of a considerable portion of the money invested.

Perhaps a statement of my case, which is an average one and not some unusual exception, might be of interest. During the year of 1916 my gross receipts from my theatre amounted to just $8,050, and my expenditures totaled only a little short of $12,000, and I am credited with being an intelligent showman. I am at present paying seven distinct taxes, which last year amounted to well over a thousand dollars, and yet it is seriously proposed that I be saddled with still another tax.

The motion picture stands to-day as one of the greatest educators in existence. Incidentally it has been proven beyond all question that the picture theatre has accomplished more against the saloon evil than all other forces combined. It is the poor man's amusement, and represents usually a two-hour entertainment for ten cents. There are occasionally bad pictures, exactly as there are also occasionally dishonest legislators, but we do not characterize all legislators as dishonest, and start popular movements to exterminte the entire legislative system.

The average attack on this industry has been petty and childish, and usually engineered by that well-known combination, "short-haired women and long-haired men." Censorship we shall always have to fight, because there exists so many idle people with badly deformed and diseased minds who can find evil where saner people would never think of looking for it. You know the old story of the lady and the bishop who passed near a swimming pool. The lady ejaculated: "Look at those nasty little boys entirely naked," and the bishop after a long searching look, answered: "Why, they are boys, aren't they?" That's censorship in a nutshell.

In closing let me say that in this small community I have invested many thousands of dollars, as you probably know, in serving the public with low-priced, clean amusement. I assure you that with one more unsuccessful year, with added taxation and increased expenses, I shall be compelled to close my doors, and I seriously doubt if there will be any one temerous enough to enter the amusement field in the face of my monumental failure. Please understand that this lack of financial success is really in no way attributable to mismanagement, and is simply a replica of similar failure all over the State and throughout the country.

If you are to be in the county at any time in the near future I should like to go into this question with you in detail, and should you feel that it will be of any benefit I shall be glad to run up to Albany and answer any questions you may wish to put to me. I know of no measure so fraught with direful possibilities as this same contemplated tax on New York exhibitors, because it represents what will be considered the last straw added to the burden of an already overloaded camel.

Official War Films, Inc., in New Quarters

For greater convenience in co-operating with the General Film Company, which is to distribute the official pictures of the European war, Official War Films, Inc., has removed to 440 Fourth avenue, New York, the General Film headquarters. The American Ambulance Corps, with a similar object in view, is taking offices in the same building.

Official War Films, Inc., of which Wm. K. Vanderbilt is president, and H. P. Davison treasurer, not only controls the American rights for the British official war pictures and the pictures of the American Ambulance Corps in France, but is now negotiating with the French Government for the American control of the French official pictures. Its entire gross profits are devoted to war relief.

The ambulance corps pictures were secured through the committee of the American Ambulance Field Service in France, consisting of Mrs. Wm. K. Vanderbilt, Miss Anne Morgan, Miss Elizabeth Marbury, and their associates in the wonderful service for the care of the wounded which they have inaugurated and maintained.

Metro's "The Promise," Feb. 18

Metro's feature release for Feb. 19 will be a new starring vehicle for Harold Lockwood and May Allison, a five-act picturization of James B. Hendryx's novel, "The Promise." The screen version has been made by Richard V. Spencer, by arrangement with the All Story Weekly, the original publishers of the book, and produced under the direction of Fred. J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation.

Life in a logging camp in the great Northwest is shown in "The Promise.

"It's Up to You," Bell Tells New York Exhibitors

License Commissioner Bell made an interesting guest of honor at a meeting of Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, held last Tuesday. The Commissioner went into a frank explanation of the attitude of the license bureau toward the picture men, with particular reference to the question of censorship.

"I am not in favor of legalized censorship," he declared, "and I believe that the work of our department during the past three years has shown that it is unnecessary. We have found the courts quick to stand by us in the rare cases when we have felt compelled to act on a picture, so that we cannot see the need of further censorship.

"But let me tell you that the whole question of legal censorship is in your hands. The fate of the motion picture industry rests in the hands of you men—you exhibitors. When you realize your power, and realize that by booking off-color films you are bringing present and future buying to your business, than the need and demand for legalized censorship will cease."

Samuel Trigger presided over the meeting at which close to a hundred exhibitors were present. Deputy Commissioner Kaufman spoke following Mr. Bell. The License Commissioner extended an emphatic word of thanks to the picture men for the support given the city officials during the infantile paralysis plague.

Fox Prison Drama at Lyric for Premier

"The Honor System," William Fox's prison reform drama, opened at the Lyric theatre, New York City, with a matinee on Lincoln's birthday, February 12. It is the second big Fox production to hold the screen at the Lyric, as previous to its showing "A Daughter of the Gods" was there. The afternoon house was comfortably filled, and the audience, which was composed of the public, in the majority loudly applauded various passages of the picture. The reviews in the dailies on Tuesday morning were in general laudatory, all of them predicting a long run for the picture. It will be reviewed in next week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Shirley Mason Extensively Advertised

McClure Pictures assert that the likeness of no other person—motion picture star, baseball player, government official or other man or woman, notable or notorious—has been printed as often in the last three months as has that of Shirley Mason, one of the stars of "Seven Deadly Sins."

The McClure advertising campaign in twenty-four magazines, has caused Miss Mason's picture to be printed more than fifty million times.

In special newspaper and magazine publicity, outside of display advertising, the circulation of her picture has exceeded twenty-five million copies. In the McClure newspaper advertising campaign her picture will be printed that many times more.

Colorado Censor Bill Modeled on Kansas Law

If a bill introduced in the Colorado legislature today by Representative Houtchens, on request, becomes a law, the "movie" picture producer will have another problem added to his kit and the Attorney-General of Colorado be richer by a new title—that of State Censor of the Movies. The Houtchens bill is framed on the lines of a Kansas law, except that the Attorney-General, instead of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, is designated as chief executioner. Under the provisions of the Houtchens act all films and reels, except those shown in educational institutions, are subject to examination before exhibition, by the Attorney-General at a fee of $2 a reel or film, which fee is to be turned into the general fund of the State treasury.

The first violation of the law by an exhibitor will be punishable by a fine of $25 to $100; each day the film is exhibited without the consent of the new Attorney-General shall constitute a new and separate offense.

Abrams Buys Ball Team

Having gobbled up most of the stage stars, the motion picture producers are now invading the baseball field and stealing stars by the team-full. The breach in the first line trenches was made when the Portland (Eastern League) Baseball Team was purchased last week, by Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; Arch Selwyn, the well-known theatrical producer, and Stanley Mastbaum, of Philadelphia, known for his many motion picture holdings in the Quaker City.

Mr. Abrams, who is president of the newly-formed club, declares that he is going to tour with his new club in the summer, and the chances are that he will be flanked by movie cameras. At any rate, he states that before he gets through with it, the Portland team will be the paramount team of New England.

Committee from Albany Holds Secret Hearing

Investigation Goes on Behind Closed Doors--Goldfish and Selznick Enliven Otherwise Dull Public Hearings

OWING to the fact that the Wheeler investigating committee which came down from Albany to find out who is getting all of the fabulous film profits, has held a number of important secret sessions, no information from which can be secured, the investigation as far as the general public is concerned, is finished.

Several witnesses were examined while reporters were present, and while some of this testimony was interesting to the point of being picturesque, it is doubtful if any facts of sound, fundamental worth have been added to the testimony previously recorded.

While it seems necessary that the investigators be given such vital information as the net cost of production, the yearly balance statements and the complete inventories of each witness, it is not unreasonable to say that their witnesses are reluctant to undrape their businesses for a curious and hostile competitor to stare at and gloat over.

The present film situation is such that manufacturers cannot be blamed for withholding their private business statistics from public knowledge. Competition is too keen, and the unhappy fact cannot be denied that "double crossing" is the most popular form of sport indulged in by certain members of the industry.

Samuel Goldfish of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, had some interesting things to tell the committee on the subject of stars. At one point he was asked this question by Senator Hinman: "What about the big salaries paid the stars by the motion picture companies?"

Mr. Goldfish replied:

"Really great personalities are worth all the money motion picture producers pay them. Geraldine Farrar, Mary Garden, Maxine Elliott, Mary Pickford, Mr. Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, Jane Cowl, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Clara Kimball Young are worth every dollar they receive because they are established and immensely popular artists with powers of great attraction for audiences. The Goldwyn organization, I assure you, will engage every great artist on whom we think we can make a profit.

"There will always be commanding personalities in motion pictures who are worth the big salaries. The one point I would make about the large salary question is that the money paid to dozens of so-called stars, or lesser personalities, are greatly in excess of the value of the players.

"Where the star is now pre-eminent, I expect to see the story or play itself become the matter of first importance at a later stage of the industry's development. A vast percentage of the picture theatres today insist upon daily changes of bill and to make certain that their houses will be filled the managers exploit the personalities of big artists and favorite players in whom the public is interested. As we build up and lay stress upon the strength of the story this development is certain to lead to longer runs for the individually worth while productions in the theatres throughout the country."

Lewis J. Selznick, testifying Friday, asserted that less brains were necessary to make money in the motion picture business than in any other he had any knowledge of. As an instance of how easy it was to make money Mr. Selznick told of organizing one company with $1,000 capital which cleared $105,000 in ten weeks.

The witness said he was sometimes given 50 per cent. of the profits for supervising the producing of films, and that Clara Kimball Young paid him $1,000 a week. Mr. Selznick does not release his pictures through a regular program, but in spite of this he said exhibitors took them and made money. He said the distributing end of the business needed investigating, and estimated that $25,000,000 was lost annually through inefficiency in distributing films.

On account of the failure of Joseph Engel of the Metro Pictures Corporation to appear before the commission in answer to a subpoena served upon him Thursday night the committee decided to report him to the Assembly on Monday for contempt.

Benjamin Getz, of Erbograph, was on the stand Thursday morning, and stated, in response to the committee's most popular question, that he bought all of the raw stock his company uses from Eastman. Rembusch, secretary and treasurer of the World Film Corporation, followed him to the stand and told the investigators something about film capitalization and mergers.

Selig Loses to Mutual in Suit for Infringement

Lengthy litigation against the Mutual Film Corporation brought by the Selig Polyscope Company to prevent Mutual's use of the picture title "The House of a Thousand Scandals," has been decided in favor of the defendant by Judge Pendleton in the Supreme Court of New York.

Selig's contention was that the Mutual Company infringed on the rights and title of the Selig production "The House of a Thousand Candles." Exhibitors who booked both pictures testified the titles were not confusing or of detriment to each other.

Withey to Direct Seena Owen

Seena Owen's return to the Triangle-Fine Arts studios, after an absence of several months, has been signalized by the announcement that she will be featured in a new play under the direction of Chester Withey.

Miss Owen has been a member of the Fine Arts forces since the formation of the company, and has won unusual commendation for her handling of leading roles in some of the best productions that have been released on the Triangle program. Her work in "The Lamb," "The Penitents" and "Martha's Vindication" will perhaps be most vividly recalled.

Spooky, Smoky Spirits Materialize at "U"

Marvelous Mystic of South Transmits Scenario Plot for Violet Mersereau Through Nat Rothstein; Seance Successful

RIVALLING the creepy ghost tales of our youth, and the more modern instances of psycho-telepathy, mind reading, spirit communications and other phenomena vouched for by advanced scientists such as Maurice Maeterlinck, comes the tale of the psycho-scenarioist, presented, written, edited and vouched for by Nat Rothstein, advertising manager of the Universal Film Company.

'Twas last December that Universal received a communication—material not spiritual—from one Edwin Williamson of Selma, Alabama. It seems Mr. Williamson had under his wing an Edgar Cayce, to whom it was child's play to pick messages from the air, find gold under sidewalks, foretell the end of the war or the name of Nat Goodwin's next wife. Opportunity was asked to prove that Mr. Cayce would send a scenario by air route.

The scene now shifts. Churchills at 8:30 P. M., Thursday. Around a table may be seen dainty Violet Mersereau; Peter Milne, Motion Picture News; Ben Grimm, Moving Picture World; Frederick Schrader, Variety; Arthur Unger, New York Clipper; John Reddy, New York Telegraph; Ben Davis, New York Tribune, and of course, Mr. Rothstein.

From the very beginning the seance was successful. Spirits were present in profusion. Even an East Indian mystic would have been hard pressed to explain how so many spirits invaded the material bodies present—with all lights up, minus rappings, and nothing concealed in the sleeves.

For fifty minutes a paper bearing the information as to what kind of a play Miss Mersereau wished psycho-scenarioist Cayce to send her, lay on the table. As yet space beneath the table was vacant.

Time passed. So did the spirits. Also several present. Nat Rothstein was missed and could not be found above, around or even beneath the table. He reappeared in time to join a psychological octette raising their voices—and glasses—in honor of Miss Mersereau. Then—shades of the late lamented Madame Thebes—a telegram arrived from mystic Cayce containing an outline of the scenario desired by the Universal star. Mr. Rothstein looked at his watch "Ten minutes late—and I tipped the boy, too," sotto voice. Others still present sat in solemn thought. For a moment it looked as though the happy influence of the good spirits would not avail. Another army rushed to aid—and all was well.

Miss Mersereau says she turned over the scenario outline to Universal's scenario-department.

But why pick on Selma, Alabama, Mr. Rothstein?

The State Rights Market Is Here to Stay

An Interview with Paul Lemarquand—"State Rights Principle Is Correct and Proper—Manufacturer Should Help Distributor by Advertising—Give Us Clean Pictures."

MANAGER PAUL LEMARQUAND of the Super-Attraction Film Company, the only exchange in Omaha, Neb., dealing exclusively with state rights features, has just returned from New York, and has a suggestion for everybody interested in the state rights field. While in New York he bought the rights to "The Witching Hour" for Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma.

"In the first place," he said, "the state rights branch of the industry is here to stay, and I confidently believe it will come to be more important than the exchange. One big reason is that the exhibitor knows when he deals with a state rights exchange that he is dealing directly with the distributor, and not with the distributor through a man paid so much a month. He knows that if local conditions demand action aside from the rule laid down in New York that the state rights exchange can adapt itself to the emergency without reams of time consuming correspondence with the heads in the East.

"When I talk to a man about my pictures I am earnest and he knows it. I am not talking for a salary, indifferent whether the sale is made. I have my own money, my own cash tied up in the picture I am bringing him and he knows it. He knows I am permanently established, that I will be back again if the picture is rotten or if it is good."

While he is not indignant over another phase of the state rights business—that phase having to do with the producer's promises to the purchaser—Mr. Lemarquand might be said to regret it. It is this:

"Before I go to New York to buy the rights to a picture I see reams and reams of advertisements in Motion Picture News and in the other trade papers. I go, see the picture, pay thousands for the right to it and am promised it will be advertised. Before I buy the picture I am not particularly interested in the advertisements, only as they affect me as a purchaser. But after I buy that picture I am intensely interested in the advertisements.

"But lo! when I return home I learn the rights to the picture have been sold throughout the entire country within one week. Then the advertising stops. I am vitally interested, but it stops.

"The companies are doing enough advertising, perhaps, but they are not doing it properly, to my motion. While we are not being permitted to see the picture to buy it, there are advertisements, two-page advertisements, in the trade papers. But when we are permitted to see the picture, when we realize its worth and promptly buy it, then the advertisements stop.

"Let the company plan to spend the same amount advertising. But let them use only one page advertisements while getting the state rights dealers interested. Then, after they sell us the picture, which they will if it is a good picture, let them continue the single page advertisements and help us make a more enduring success. Advertising is the heart of any picture. Take it away and that picture is bound to be a cold, damp failure. The man who sold me the rights to that picture and to whom I paid cash knows I will come back again if the picture is a success."

When Mr. Lemarquand goes to buy the state rights to a picture what does he ask? That is of interest to the exhibitors, to state rights buyers and sellers.

"I first ask: Is it better than the program? Often the exhibitor must lay his program for the day on the shelf while he shows our picture.

"Next: Is the title well known, and is the advertising the right kind? I recently bought a picture in New York and looked at the lobby display they offered me. It was entirely unfitting; the picture deserved a better lobby display. I went to a dealer and had one made. The advertising was not up to my requirements.

"Thirdly: Is the story a clean story? The day of the white slave picture is over in these parts. Too long the exhibitors have looked upon the state rights man as the fellow who has a suggestive, questionable picture to attract the public through its less desirable nature. Our profit is in the smaller towns, after the big cities, and I want to state emphatically that the smaller towns of my territory don't want anything shady.

"Fourth and last: Does the picture carry the right kind of stars?

"Those are the four things necessary before I will buy the rights to a picture for my territory."

Mr. Lemarquand is still enthusiastic over a recent visit to Minneapolis. "In that city the state right business is equal to that of the old line companies," he says.

What Shall Mary Garden Play? Public to Decide

Decision as to Mary Garden's first photoplay production is to be left to the public.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, with which the operatic star is under contract, is asking, through the newspapers and magazines, for the screen lovers to sit as a jury, and name the picture they wish to see Miss Garden in.

"Salome," "Thais," "Louise" and the "Juggler of Notre Dame," to name a few of her operatic successes, are merely suggested as a basis for balloting by Goldwyn Pictures. Whether it is one of these, or an entirely different subject which will first present Miss Garden on the screen will be for the public to signify.

Miss Garden promises to answer each letter she receives.

"And why shouldn't my first play be agreed on in this manner?" she asks. "If I were singing in concert I would have certain set numbers, but my encores would reflect the preferences of my audiences. If there is that democracy in opera and in concert, there should be, and is, an even greater democracy in pictures. I would like to have suggestions. The more of them, the better."

WITH THE EXHIBITOR

West Virginia Association Organized at Pittsburgh

The exhibitors and exchangemen of West Virginia, seeing that their very existence has been threatened by the censorship law which is now pending before the state legislature have organized at Pittsburgh to fight the bill.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of West Virginia is the name of the new organization, and it will do all in its power to put the bill in the legislature out of commission before it is too late and the measure becomes a law.

Prominent attorneys attended the first meeting and spoke on the bill as well as a number of men who are most familiar with the motion picture business. Objection is being made to the bill that a motion picture censorship is not needed in West Virginia.

The following are the officers of the new organization: President Charles A. Feinler, Vice-President George Zeppides, Secretary Rube Robinson and Treasurer M. A. Seibert.

Maryland Local Plans Dance

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Maryland Branch N. P. E. L. A., a committee to decide upon an exhibitors' dance was selected, consisting of Frank A. Hornig, president of the League, ex officio; Frederick Clement Weber, chairman; J. Louis Rome, secretary; E. B. McCurdy, treasurer, and Louis DeHuff is also on the committee. A general meeting of the organization will be held on Sunday, February 25. At this meeting the chairman of the ball committee will report that the committee recommends the holding of the dance and will suggest the latter part of April for the day.

One of the special features will be a contest which will be held for the fans, allowing them to vote upon the actor and actress who will lead the grand promenade.

Brooklyn Ball at Coney Island

If hard work by every one of the hundred and ten members of Local No. 3, M. P. E. L. of A., Brooklyn, will do it, the grand ball at Coney Island on Washington's Birthday eve, February 21, will be a howling success. Stauch's ballroom easily accommodates 5,000 on the big floor. Douglas Fairbanks and Anita Stewart have promised to lead the grand march. Floor, music (Barton's Orchestra of sixty pieces) and entertainment will be the finest. The Brooklyn Eagle, through a lively voting contest to select the King and Queen of the Carnival, is furnishing invaluable publicity. The B. R. T. Company will run special trains and cars, and parking space for 1,500 automobiles will be in readiness. Anita Stewart is a Brooklyn girl, and her thousands of Brooklyn friends will be there.

Exchange Head Names Live Wires Now in East

Looks Ahead to Time in Near Future When Big Ideas Common in West Will Be Used to Win Eastern Audiences to Theatres

AN important exchange head advises us in a recent letter that energetic Western theatre managers are about to make their ideas felt in the East. Such advertising as makes fifty per cent of the theatregoing community see every feature of special importance is done in many Western cities. This is true.

"Of this school, who know how to bring people into the theatre, as well as to take care of them when they get there," continues our correspondent, "Mr. McCormack, formerly of Salt Lake City and Denver theatres, and now manager of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, is one of the very best. I might also mention Mr. Thomas of the Omaha Strand theatre, Mr. S. H. Ellison of the American theatre, Salt Lake City; Mr. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis.

"In my trips over the country I have seen hundreds of wonderful pictures sneaking into the little towns, and no one realizes how wonderful they are, the manager of the theatre himself doesn't even know it, and the result is we all lose money."

This man's letter is quoted here to exhibitors because, as the business head of perhaps the oldest company in the business, he speaks directly as if he were himself an exhibitor, and shows that some of the exchange heads, at least, realize the crucial situation the entire industry is facing through the exhibitor's inactivity in some cases.

What else he has to say, at this time, to exhibitors will, we believe, be admitted to this forum as worth the exhibitor's discussion. So let us listen again:

The amount that the public pays to see pictures today will be multiplied by four just as soon as a new generation of exhibitors comes along.

Two years ago I started a school for film salesmen. I said that I didn't want a salesman who robbed an exhibitor. I wanted a salesman who would show the exhibitor how to handle any certain picture so that the exhibitor would get as large an amount of money as possible from his community, and then I wanted the salesman to ask a fair share of that amount for the film company which he represented.

Some of the biggest men then in the industry told me that they didn't want salesmen who would help the exhibitors, they wanted men who would rob the exhibitors, because that was the only kind of thing these men were capable of appreciating.

Yet today practically every manager and at least one-half of the salesmen I have can put on a picture and write ads for it, know how to help the theatres to lay down a broad general policy that will build business.

This doesn't mean that they are better, but it means that they have learned what we consider their trade should be—and it is just as possible for them to learn this trade as it is for the average young man to learn to be an advertising agent—and every real business man knows that he needs an advertising agent.

Today practically all companies are trying to operate along these lines, but it is generally talk, and little action, because the heads of the companies don't know how to do these things themselves.

The fact that they are all trying means that sooner or later they will all succeed in applying this policy of co-operation.

Therefore, the next thing that remains to be done is to make the average exhibitor see that the only way he can succeed is by making his house a big factor in his community, but he can only do this if he has a good enough show, and enough seats so that he can afford to advertise.

The sooner this is impressed on exhibitors, the sooner they will get on a basis that will not only assure them of continuing in the business, but make it possible for all the rest of us to make money, which practically none of us are doing today.

In making these statements I am working, as always, for the general good of the industry, because if the industry prospers I will prosper. I am not speaking specifically of my company, because our schedule for the next twelve months apportions $1,000,000 for profits and other net earnings to go into building the organization, further, another $1,000,000 for advertising, and $1,000,000 for maintaining our sales organization, which we believe to be the best and finest in the business.

Of course, this sounds like a lot of hot air, and maybe it is if you look at it from the viewpoint of just today, but it is hanging steadily to policies like this, as I have for the three years that I have been in the business, that in the end builds a great big result, and that is what we are trying to do, so when you criticize our methods you want to look at them with the viewpoint of next year as well as today.

We are liable to many upsets and much grief as the portion of every man in this industry, especially if he happens to be working for some one else, but if I stepped out tomorrow I wouldn't feel ashamed of the ideas which I have introduced and incorporated into the life of the industry.

Very few people agreed with me at the time I started them, but one of the first men who seemed to sympathize with my ideas was Mr. Johnston, your president and editor.

This letter was brought forth by a criticism by the editor of With Exhibitors Department of a certain policy adopted by this exchange head's company, and is a sincere reply to that criticism. It was not sent us for publication in these columns, but we consider it decidedly "belongs" in the Exhibitors' Forum.

Now, exhibitors, may we hear from you?

Oklahoma League Meets Feb. 12-13

President Talbot issued a call to Oklahoma Exhibitors to rally to the annual meeting, Feb. 12 and 13 at the Lee Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, and the response has been big, the invitation including exchange men in Oklahoma City, Dallas and Kansas City.

Besides the annual election of officers there is much business to be transacted. The exhibitors of the state are threatened with a Sunday Closing law and a Censorship bill. Both the exhibitors and the opposition have been laying their plans and working hard each for their respective sides since the last session of the legislature two years ago. The exhibitors have many friends in the present legislature which is now in session in Oklahoma City. There is much talk of making a concerted effort to do away with the deposit system in Oklahoma. It is almost certain that the coming convention will do something along this line. However a good turnout is looked for and a good time is assured for all who attend. Much entertainment and a banquet has been provided by the entertainment committee, which consists of B. H. Powell, E. C. Mills, John Sinopoulo, W. H. McCall, Maurice Lowenstein, Thos. H. Boland, all of Oklahoma City.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

ARIZONA.—Nogales: The health department has quarantined Nogales, and Los Angeles (Cal.) exchanges have been advised to suspend shipment of films until the quarantine has been raised.

Yuma: Johan H. Johansen, owner of the only two motion picture theatres in Yuma, spent the week in Los Angeles purchasing new electrical equipment to meet the requirements of his houses because of a change in the municipal plant from direct to alternating curent. Mr. Johansen plays each theatre as a unit, and attributes his sucess to keeping up a continual contest with himself to make one house race against the other for the best receipts.

CALIFORNIA.—Upland: M. Whitmoyer, who for more than two years has conducted the Colonial theatre at Upland, has gone East, where he expects to purchase a theatre.

San Bernardino: Carl Ray, former Michigan exhibitor, who owned a circuit of theatres in that State, has leased the Auditorium at San Bernardino, and is having it enlarged and refurnished throughout. When the changes are completed, the seating capacity will be sixteen hundred.

Los Angeles: S. Stern, who has conducted the Rosebud on Central avenue, Starland on North Broadway, and other Los Angeles theatres, has recently leased three additional ones, these being the Palace, of 800 seats, at Forty-seventh and Moneta; the Belasco, a former legitimate house, of 1,000 seats, at 227 South Main, and the Gaiety, 800 seats, at Twenty-fourth and Central avenue. He will install an individual manager for each theatre

ILLINOIS.—Joliet: C. M. Fox, formerly of De Kalb, and John Cushman of Sterling have assumed the management of the Grand theatre here, and it will in future be known as the Fox theatre. Several changes in policy are contemplated, among which is a daily afternoon and evening performance.

Benton: George Colovos, manager of the Mars and Auditorium theatres, has made many improvements since taking charge, and is being complimented on all sides for same. In the Mars theatre he has installed a pianorchestra, which is highly appreciated.

Nokomis: Harold G. Holmes, who recently leased Holmes' Opera House, is introducing many innovations which are being well received. His latest is the addition of Prof. Newel Schafer and an eight-piece orchestra to furnish suitable music for his films.

Aurora: The Orpheum theatre in Main street is to be extensively remodeled according to the plans now under consideration by Mrs. C. W. Dewey, the owner of the theatre. The building is owned by P. G. Hartz. The plans call for extensive remodeling of the cosy little theatre, the addition of a balcony and about 200 seats on the main floor. The remodeling will be done by Mrs. Dewey, who is closing negotiations for a long term lease of the building.

DeKalb: Charles Fox of this town has bought a motion picture theatre in Joliet and is planning to make Joliet his permanent home.

Peoria: E. C. Bostick, formerly of Peoria, is managing the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, one of the finest motion picture houses in Wisconsin.

La Salle: Miss Olga Heilstedt, the new owner of the Marquette theatre, recently had a formal opening to inaugurate the change of management, which was well attended and augurs well for the theatre's future.

INDIANA.—Delphi: F. E. Wallace, recently leased the motion picture theatre here and, having made necessary repairs and improvements, opened to good business early this month.

Franklin: W. C. Milliron recenty purchased a motion picture theatre here, and when necessary changes and improvements are made his son Robert will take charge. Mr. Milliron and wife are at present sojourning at St. Petersburg, Fla.

IOWA.—Cedar Rapids: Joe Mulherin of Marengo has bought the Garden theatre, a play house devoted to the showing of motion pictures, the transfer to take place March 1, B. W. Umbreit, the present proprietor, built the theatre a few years ago and built it especially as a film play theatre. Almost every known convenience was placed in the specifications and it is one of the best equipped motion picture houses in the state. It is understood the consideration was $25,000. Mr. Umbreit has not announced his future plans.

Fred Joss of the South End Realty Co. announces the transfer of the Ideal theatre and grounds to C. E. Arnett of Center Point, from F. J. Smid, who has owned the theatre for the last two years and who was the owner of the grounds and put up the building. Mr. Arnett has leased the theatre to W. M. Griffin of Columbus Junction, who will take possession and will operate the theatre beginning March 1. Mr. Griffin is an old, experienced motion picture man, and will be aided by his family in the running of the theatre, his daughter being a clever pianist.

Toledo: Harold Paxton has sold out his interest in the motion picture show to Edgar Stewart. Mr. Stewart now has the entire control of the business. He gives two entertainments a week, on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

LOUISIANA.—New Orleans: The Sobel, Richards, Shear Amusement Enterprises are having plans made for the erection of two more suburban motion picture houses.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Andover: The Colonial theatre went under new management a few days ago, John R. Oldfield assuming charge. When asked about his plans Mr. Oldfield said, "Please don't say too much. Let me have a little time to look around, see what the Andover patrons want and I'll try to give it to them. I want to please them, and make friends. There are some changes I want to make, a little later. First of all I want to add another machine, so as to be able to present pictures continuously, without waits. It spoils a good picture to have to wait while the reels are changed. There are other little things I want to alter that will, I think, add to the comfort and enjoyment of the patrons of the house. But good pictures are the first thing to look to. Come in and see what we are offering, and let your friends know."

MINNESOTA.—Swanville: H. E. West has leased the B. B. Fox hall and will open a motion picture show. Entertainments will be given twice each week.

MONTANA.—Big Timber: Dorman Kellog has closed his Arcade theatre at Big Timber, being content to let what profit there is in the town go to his opposition rather than keep open for the sake of competition.

Butte: Manager C. E. Schmidt, Pathe Exchange at Butte, has just returned from an extensive trip which is understood to have taken in Spokane and Seattle. When asked about rumors that the Rialto was to use Pathe service, he would neither deny nor affirm it, saying that he was merely covering his territory and denying that he was in Seattle lining up service.

The American theatre, Butte, used a half-page ad in each of the daily newspapers to tell of what Manager Paul Noble said was a 100 per cent program for the week. It consisted of "Truthful Tulliver," new Wm. S. Hart Triangle, "Her New York," Gladys Hulette, "Kick In," Pathe Gold Rooster and the premiere of "The Common Law," Clara Kimball Young, Selznick. Sunday, "Her New York" went over big; Monday and Tuesday, "Kick In" stood them up; Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Bill Hart drew a turnaway, and Saturday they almost broke down the doors to see Clara Kimball Young.

Glendive: Wyman and Wyman, new men in the business, have taken over the Lyric theatre at Glendive. Among the features are three Pathe Gold Roosters each week and from reports they are doing a good business by showing features only.

Hamilton: E. C. Freshwater has taken over the Star and Family theatres in Hamilton, from Mr. and Mrs. Seafield.

Helena: Kernan and Freeman have taken over the two Hippodrome vaudeville shows at Great Falls and Helena, and will show in the Palace and Liberty theatres, Will Steege, former lessee, having retained Pantages vaudeville at the Grand theatre.

Malta: The Lyric theatre, Malta, has been taken over by the Orpheum interests and closed, and its manager, R. Robinson, it is said, will have charge of the Orpheum at Glasgow, a nearby town. It is not known who will run the Orpheum at Malta.

Missoula: The Isis, Bijou and Empress theatres, Missoula, are now under one management, the Missoula Amusement Co., Gilbert J. Heyfron, general manager. The Bijou will be used for Hippodrome vaudeville two nights only. Former Manager Tom McDonald, of the Isis, left immediately for Butte, where he is to manage the new People's, nearly completed.

Washington: J. L. Shaw, an exhibitor of Washington, has taken over the Liberty at Whitefish ,and reports good success in showing Pathe and Vitagraph features. Much credit for his success must be given the consistent and judicious use of advertising, especially the personal reviews of each feature in Shaw's specially prepared heralds and programs.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Hankinson: The Gem theatre at Hankinson has been sold by A. E. Pfeifer to William Mefers and A. J. Withnell of Jamestown, who have already taken possession.

OHIO.—Piqua: I. M. Sacheroff, twenty-eight years old, manager of a motion picture theatre here, was killed a few days ago at Cleveland by being run over by a street car.

Ottawa: J. H. Edsall of North Baltimore has leased Tawa theatre of the I. O. O. F. lodge.

Cleveland: Leases on two East End theatres, taken by one concern, were recently filed for record. In one contract, the Haltnorth Co. leased to the Feer Theatre Co. the Haltnorth theatre and equipment at 2571 E. Fifty-fifth street, for ten years, beginning September 1, 1916, at rentals ranging from $8,200 to $10,200 a year.

In the second record, the Globe Amusement Co. leased to the Feer Theatre Co. the Globe theatre at 5217 Woodland avenue S. E. for thirteen years and three months, at $5,000 a year and $50 a week in addition.

Tiffin: The Sigma motion picture house, of Tiffin, has recently been sold to the Delux Theatre Company of Lima, according to word just received. Thomas J. Powell, of Findlay, the former proprietor, who had paid $500 to secure an option on the theatre, left his home a few days ago to go to Tiffin to pay the balance on the playhouse, but he mysteriously disappeared and no trace has been found of him since. He carried about $5,000 on his person, according to his family and they fear foul play. Dr. R. H. Machamer, of Tiffin, completed the deal with the Delux Company on Friday.

Toledo: Dr. W. A. Crecelius, principal creditor, was the highest bidder for the lease and fixtures of the Star theatre here recently, and will take possession as soon as the formality of confirming the sale in the Federal Court at Toledo is complied with. The lease brought $1,500 and the fixtures approximately $1,000.

Urbana: Urbana will have only three motion picture theatres as the result of a deal just closed by the managements of the Clifford, Ideal and Lyric theatres. They have bought the Princess theatre and that house will go out of business. This house has been showing films only on Saturdays.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Columbia: Announcement is made that the Opera House, a theatre used for motion picture exhibitons, with a seating capacity of 2,000, has been leased to Gayle Burlingame, of Harrisburg, by the New Enterprise Company, which has been operating the house for several years. Dan Naegley, who who has been local manager, will engage in the amusement business hereafter in Lebanon, Pa.

TENNESSEE.—Memphis: E. A. Schiller, general manager of the Loew Southern circuit of theaters, who is in charge of the theatrical changes now being made in Memphis, announces that Frank Gray, former manager of the Lyceum theatre, will become resident manager of the Lyric theatre, and Benj. Stainback, former resident manager of the Lyric, will become assistant manager of the new Loew theatre here.

Mr. Gray will assume his new duties at the Lyric at the close of this week, and Mr. Stainback goes to the new Loew's Lyceum theatre with its opening Feb. 12.

WISCONSIN.—De Pere: Mrs. A. Florence and son Earl moved to Princeton where they will open a motion picture theatre.

New Clarus: Gottfried Langacher has purchased the motion picture apparatus from Dr. E. J. Helgesen and will continue to hold shows regularly.

Looks Like Ed. Is Right

Ed. Wagner, Hartford, Wis., recently received a form letter from a large program producing exchange, with a coupon attached, intended for the exhibitor to write for "prices" on their "special two-reel war drama," which the body of the letter advises will make him "a clean up." Evidently Ed. felt like "cleaning up" the exchange, and forwards to us with the following marginal comment—"Look! you goat, look! The pictures that will bring a little extra return you can't have. Look! Here it is again; extra! extra! Be sure you don't let the exhibitor get one penny too much. If you think the goat will get a few pennies extra on a certain picture, take it away from him. Charge him extra. Other exhibitors don't be so foolish as to bite for anything like this."

It does look like rubbing it in for a program releasing company to select a two-reel picture, with regular program stars, to make it a "special." The excuse, of course, is that the charging the extra cost may stir the exhibitor to redoubled energy. But it is such tactics as these that have discouraged exhibitors from the short programs and caused an over production of "features."

St. Louis Exhibitors' Association Establishes New Headquarters

The Theatre Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association have moved from the third floor of the Benoist Building to their new and spacious home in the Beers Hotel, at Grand and Olive streets.

The new quarters are ideally situated right in the heart of the exchange district. Half a dozen film exchanges are just across the street from the Beers Hotel, and it is less than six blocks to the distributing offices in the Plaza Building, and others in that neighborhood.

The association's new home is in the space formerly occupied by the Hotel Rathskeller, and it is very commodious. There is an abundance of floor space, anterooms, cloak-rooms, lavatories, a first-class restaurant and buffet, and all of the first-class conveniences are available.

The St. Louis association has been making remarkable strides in the last few months. It now has sixty-eight active members, and enough associate members to bring the total up to more than a hundred.

The first meeting was held in the new home of the association on Friday, January 26. A lease for a year was taken on the club rooms.

Big Pictures at Majestic in Los Angeles

Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles All Star Feature Distributors' Exchange, has leased the Majestic theatre for a showing of the Selznick picture "War Brides" for a period of three or four weeks. This will be followed by an indefinite engagement of the Thomas H. Ince production "Civilization." At the present time Cecil B. deMille's Geraldine Farrar picture, "Joan the Woman," is enjoying a very successful run at this house.

Indiana Exhibitor Decries "Mad Scramble"

Asks "Permission to Explode" on Several Important Subjects in Order to "Keep the Ball a Rollin'"

GRANT S. BOICE, manager of the Croxton theatre at Angola, Ind., writes a snappy letter decrying the present conditions in the film industry and suggesting that it is up to the exhibitors themselves to cure the evil. After asking permission to "explode also" and "keep the ball a rollin'" he explains he is not a pessimist, but is sure the industry will in due time adjust itself. But, he says, "the final adjusting will be hastened by wise and economic organizing—and this organizing or co-operation must be brought about by better understanding between all classes connected with the business."

We cry out for the good old days when one-reel with no posters packed them in for two and three days, then the one sheet came and we thought we were the big it —soon we began to run multiple reels, seemingly to bolster up a losing game, then the big four and five reelers with daily changes—and then the mad scramble for more features to keep alive the fast pace we set ourselves has caused this seeming over production, nor will it stop until we, the exhibitors, call the halt ourselves.

Brother Boice then refers to the "narrow, bigoted, pinhead that resorts to unfair and degenerate methods" who will naturally drop out, and whom we should assist in the dropping out process, if we "organize—show him up—point the true way." A system of guarantee by allied exhibitors and doing away with deposits, is suggested, and here is what he says about Sunday shows:

"Ten or twelve years ago I heard the same cry. I then ran Sundays, using service no one need be ashamed of, giving a certain percentage to charity. All was well. Then the unscrupulous exhibitor came along, abused the privilege, gave less and less, finally nothing, to charity, slipping the stipend instead to the policeman on the beat and running a very much 'worldly' picture until the real public calls a halt . . . You have got to play fair and give clean pictures.

"Now about unclean pictures. A few days ago the long distance 'phone called me, asking for a booking for a production of the states rights kind. State rights was an unknown quantity in the good old days —but it's here now and a good thing, too. But this particular picture had a somewhat sensual name, and I gave the order for booking only when informed it was endorsed by the clergy, etc. When the final contracts came, one clause said 'No Children Admitted.' I canceled instanter.

"For a day we can swell our bank accounts with a morbid picture; for a day we think we are giving what the public wants to see; but the foundation for a more honorable and lasting standard will be built on pictures appealing to our better natures, and this is the ultimate goal we are all striving for."

The above remarks are too obviously sincere and earnest to require any comment. Can anyone possibly dispute their unanswerable argument?

We believe there is such a thing possible as "public sentiment," finally affecting the present attitude of the "narrow, bigoted pinheads" Mr. Boice refers to. You know them, fellow exhibitors. They think only of today, of themselves. Not of the morrow, nor of others far wiser than they, and who will in fact displace them in their egotism shortly unless they listen to reason and the call of common sense. We would rather call them "sapheads" than "pinheads"—for they have brains, only refuse to use them.

Try Co-operative Theatre

Since Exhibitor A. C. Hartman, not satisfied with the business being done at the Dundee theatre, in exclusive Dundee, a suburb of Omaha, Neb., closed the house's doors, Dundee movie fans are organizing to start a co-operative theatre. They will furnish the money for the expenses and the profits will be spent for pictures.

Family Programs Outgrowth of Children's Shows in Omaha

Children's matinees in Omaha, Neb., are spreading. Manager Hugh McCaffery of the Boulevard theatre announced this week that he would begin showing the programs recommended by the censorship committee of the Woman's Club of Omaha. This step will be followed by other surburban houses, is the belief.

The Muse, managed by Exhibitor Robert Shirley, and the Strand, with Exhibitor Thomas, have been showing the censored programs to great throngs of children each Saturday morning. Each Saturday the popularity of the children's matinees is greater.

Mrs. W. S. Knight, chairman of the club's censorship committee, who arranged the children's programs, is about ready to provide special family programs for each theatre in the city each Friday evening. These programs, like the children's matinees, will be censored.

New Theatre Making Good

Byron Sherwood, Trenton, Mo., has done wonders with the business of the Majestic, Kansas City, in the few months that he has had it. He did it all with the three "P's" important to exhibitor success—viz., "policy," "pep," and "politeness." The house is beautiful to look upon, to start with; it has a terra cotta front, on its 50 feet of width, with pillars, and an added aspect of dignity by means of glazed windows on the second story, the windows being merely for ventilation and looks, and not opening into any offices. The offices of the theatre are downstairs. The house seats 560, and in two months Mr. Sherwood has reached the point of keeping it pretty well filled each evening, and at present rate of progress he will soon need an "S. R. O." sign for regular use, for evidences to that end have already appeared, due to this exhibitor's keen sense of looking ahead.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

Joan of Arc Lobby Almost a Museum

Forty-fourth Street Theatre Has Costly Display of Beautiful Paintings and Properties of Period of Lasky-De Mille Masterplay

A HISTORICAL museum devoted to the the memory of the Maid of Orleans is what in effect Mr. Lasky and Mr. De Mille have provided as a ballyhoo for their masterful production "Joan the Woman" with Geraldine Farrar.

From the beautiful ermine cloak worn by the king, to the heavy suits of mail which impress the visitor at once with the spirit of the middle ages, everything is in keeping with the vivid lesson to be seen on the inside with the presentation of the picture.

We doubt if any production has been more carefully exploited than this. Every means possible has been used to give it the full dignity of a theatrical performance which the tremendous lesson of the play fully warrants. And so this carefully planned lobby display is worth special comment.

Costly mural panels carrying paintings by Clifford F. Pember from the famous illustrations by Boutet de Monvel are set off by elegant fleur de lis embroidered draperies, quality and not quantity being the keynote of this display.

The murals tell the story of Joan's visions, her victorious exploits, her determination to save her King coupled with her sorrow and realization of the great sacrifice she was compelling in human suffering, and finally Joan's capture by the English at Compiegne and her burning at the stake in the market place at Rouen. All events which stir the imagination, even in the reading, but which now tenfold, in the Lasky-De Mille presentation in living pictures, compel a realization of the terrible horror of medieval times, even now being repeated in the present great struggle of nations tend to more vividly impress the memories of yesteryear.

Have You a Good Slogan?

Slogans, or word trademarks are being adopted by Omaha, Neb., theatres for use in their advertisements. Instead of "Ivory Soap—It Floats" or other famous slogans, they say:

Sun.—"There's a Place for 'U' in the Sun."

Muse.—"The Theatre of First Presentations."

Hipp.—"Always a Good Show."

Besse.—"The South Side House."

Last week a local newspaper ran a page advertising competition. The slogan of each business house was given, and all kinds of businesses were represented. The person guessing, from the slogan, which place of business was represented, won a prize. The advertising man said not one answer missed the slogans of the motion picture theatres—showing the people know them by heart.

Memo Pads with Time of Shows Will Get Patrons In

The Stanley theatres in Philadelphia are sponsor for a clever idea, and a still more clever way of handling it. They have printed special "Memo pads" on inexpensive, but attractive ruled paper, which have at the top, printed in bold letters, "The Thing I Must Do Today." Then several lines, ruled, are followed by a neat three lines at the bottom "And Go to the Palace theatre, Market street at 12th, where the most exclusive of motion pictures are shown continuously, 10 A. M. to 11:15 P. M."

In order to avoid waste and know that this little expense pays for itself, the distribution is made through the Stanley mailing list of seven thousand regular patrons.

As the pad appears to us, we would suggest that a line cut in imitation handwriting be made of the line "and go to the Palace theatre," as if it had been actually written on the pad, the two small lines descriptive of show and giving hours of performance, being in plain type. Where certain hours of performance for features are in use, this little memorandum will prove valuable.

This is an idea every theatre in the country will find will pay, if the distribution is confined to actual patrons. The local printer always has scrap paper he will make a very close figure on, in order to get the job of printing.

Southern Theatre Builds Good Will with Schools

The Queen Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., recently invited all school children of that city and suburbs, to the number of six thousand, to see "Oliver Twist." The management at that time controlled another local theatre, and used it also to help accommodate the crowds. Tickets were furnished and distributed through the various school, principals and teachers, and needless to say the "Queen" is still more firmly established in Knoxville as the family theatre of the city. Ten cents is the price charged for all pictures, and one feature and two short reels is the limit of the program.

Cleveland Exhibitors Active

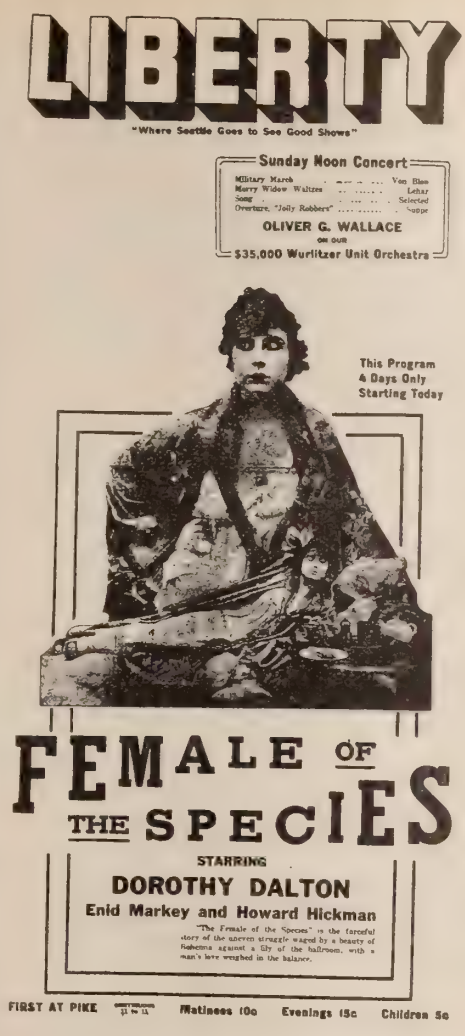
The Motion Picture Exhibitor's League held its weekly meeting on Tuesday at the League headquarters in the Republic Building. The principal business of the meeting was the bi-annual election of officers. W. J. Slimm was elected president; Henry Lustig, vice-president; Walter Horsey, financial secretary; Sam Bullock, corresponding secretary; A. Maher, treasurer. Members are elected to office in January and in July.

An interesting letter from Chief of Police W. S. Rowe was read by the corresponding secretary, in which the chief says that a lieutenant of each precinct has been instructed to visit the motion picture theatres in his precinct, to ascertain the moral tone of films exhibited. The chief begs exhibitors to co-operate with Mayor Harry Davis in his efforts to suppress all nude pictures. The league formally acknowledged the receipt of this communication and officially endorsed it.

Lobby Display for Lasky-De Mille Production, "Joan the Woman," Playing at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York

SPARKS AND FLASHES

Oi! Oi! Manager Bell at Akeley, Minnesota, took advantage of the scarcity of even newspaper these days to try the ever-new stunt which may not have been pulled in your town—and if not go to it—of printing on wall-paper than he had to "tear the paper off the walls" to make room for the crowds he expected on "Secret of the Submarine."



Belfast Opera House, 'way down-east in Maine, used to work this one in the palmy days of "licensed" single reelers, to get them up a long flight of stairs, and with the super features and super serials now offered, and the high price of other paper the wall-paper ought to win by a neck.

Meeting a problem quickly is E. C. Bostick's long suit. As manager of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., he decided to let the people know he had reduced the price to ten cents. Three experienced telephone operators and three additional trunk lines, at a cost of forty-three dollars for two weeks' service, got him as much additional business in a single day. The telephone company co-operated by watching the lines and giving immediate service. He reached homes only, and there was no guess work about it. He knew every home having a telephone had been notified of the changed price at the Merrill. Registered letter would not have been surer.

A. W. Nicolls, manager of the University theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, finds it stimulates business and "gets the crowds coming" to have a "family day" every once in a while, on an especially good program. He issues a small card, neatly printed on light cover stock, announcing the attraction, under the display lines "Family Day at the University Theatre," the ticket and ten cents "admitting two." Regular admission is ten cents for all adults.

Manager Paul Noble, American theatre, Butte, Montana, recently advertised that Pathe's "Kick In," with Gladys Hulette would put the biggest "kick in" the American's program yet. Seems to us Paul "kicked in" a good one himself.

Conventions hold theatre parties at "legitimate" houses as a part of the entertainment for the delegates, why can they not be at motion picture theatres? They can. Manager Robert Shirley of the Muse, Twenty-fourth and Farnam, Omaha, has agreed to show George Beban in "His Sweetheart" at the Muse on February 8, when 300 delegates to the National Lumbermen's Convention will attend.

Take Courage, Small Town

Milton Cohn's Paramount exchange at Denver, Colo., loses its distinction of furnishing regular service to the smallest town in the world. That was at Steamboat, a town of 125 population. Pathe exchange at Butte is furnishing regular feature service, one per week, to Fort Yellowstone, Wyo., where five (5) people view the picture at its one showing, according to Fred Springer of the United States Engineering Department at that place. These five chip in to pay the cost, which amounts to over three dollars per head, and they select their own subjects. Gold Rooster plays are used, and they prefer comedies, the following comedy dramas having been shown so far: "The Galloper," "The Precious Packet," and "Excuse Me." Some show, this!

Same "Sig" in Advertising Newest from Seattle

That T. A. Edison of theatrical advertising invention, Fullerton, of the Liberty theatre, Seattle, has broken loose again with uniform "sigs" (signatures) as he calls them. What you can't see in the illustration without close examination, is that he has adopted a distinctive way of always showing the theatre name. In the newspaper ad, which we illustrate in full because the whole set-up is out of the ordinary and worth copying, the white block letters with the heavy black shading give all possible contrast.

In the twenty-four sheet billboard, also here illustrated, contrasty colors are made use of. The "sig," pasted separately and changed every two weeks, is always in two strongly contrasting colors, with lower sheets of the "twenty-four" changed every week always in color bright, but properly harmonizing with the "sig."

Of course, this means the advertising man must know what colors "clash" and what don't, and we would advise the man who wears a purple tie with a blue shirt to leave the color selection to the lithographer.

The idea of the same signature being used wherever possible is carried out on billboards, in newspapers, on window cards, and any special advertising where the plain, bold block letters are in keeping with the medium used.

Clean Exhibitors Openly Resent Unclean Pictures

Even the exhibitors of Council Bluffs, Ia., are getting up in arms over the showing of the "moral lesson" motion pictures and are writing to the local newspapers urging that they be stopped. While they do not say so, the objecting exhibitors fear showing such pictures will bring on censorship. The Iowa legislature is in session now and is practically certain to consider censorship legislation.

"Will you give space for an expression of opinion regarding the so-called 'vice' pictures which are being shown at too-frequent intervals in at least two motion picture houses of our city?" writes "A Reputable Exhibitor" to the Council Bluffs Nonpareil.

"Great parade is made of the 'moral lesson' when these purient plays are advertised, but to one who has access to the advance announcements of the producers, it is curious that the statements deal only with box office receipts and not with the 'moral lesson.' . . . The writer has himself heard a girl, leaving a picture show after witnessing one of these 'sermons,' remark to her companion, 'I don't see anything so terrible in that.' The truth about these films would do more good than much generalizing about goodness and incidental lauding of the 'vice' play that is approved by some suppositious divine or settlement worker away off in New York."

The writer then declares reputable exhibitors are opposed to this kind of false advertising, by which a harmful play is hidden under the cloak of virtue.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

CHARLOTTE WALKER, who has just been announced as star in a new Broadway play written by her husband, Eugene Walter, is featured in the Thanhouser drama, "Mary Lawson's Secret." This play, written by Lloyd Lonergan and directed by John B. O'Brien, is to be released as a Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster Play in April. Mr. Walter was a visitor at the Thanhouser studio when some of the scenes were being taken, and volunteered to be an "extra."

GEORGE STUART CHRISTIE, well-known to patrons of the drama and light opera, will make his screen debut as loading man for Emmy Wehlen, in her forthcoming Metro production, "The Duchess of Doubt," exterior scenes of which are being made in Florida, under the direction of George D. Baker.

BEING "father" to some of the prettiest women in pictures, is getting to be a specialty of Warren Cook's. After finishing three successive pictures in which he was cast as the father of Mary Pickford, he, a short time ago jumped into another "father" role and will act in that capacity to Zena Keefe in the new Moss production of "One Hour."

JOE BURKE, a well-known character actor has been engaged to appear in Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Conquest Pictures.

For two years after becoming a screen player in 1911, he appeared in character parts in the productions of the Powers Picture Plays Company, appearing in both comedy and dramatic roles. Leaving Powers, he went to Pathe and from the latter to Reliance. Following this he filled successive engagements with Triumph, Fox, Thanhouser, Kleine, World, Famous Players, Equitable, Metro and Mutual.

WHILE commuters were fussing and fuming over being hours late in their arrival at their offices, and all vehicular traffic in New York City was nearly paralyzed by a recent snow storm, the deluge of white flakes was being prayerfully welcomed at the Famous Players studio in Fifty-sixth street. Three weeks ago, Lou-Tellegen, Mary Fuller and a company of Famous Players-Paramount players had departed to Saranac Lake for the sole purpose of getting some big snow scenes in the woods of upper New York state. They had found practically no snow upon their arrival at Saranac, and had been patiently waiting for something to happen ever since. When the storm broke, there was exchange of jubilant telegrams and the work was on.

THOMAS MEIGHAN is hurriedly going through the unfilmed classics in search of a story in which the heroine is carried about in the arms of the hero. Meighan, having carried Pauline Frederick about in his arms for her last two Famous Players-Paramount pictures "The Slave Market" and "Sapho," has the personal taxicab habit, he says, and is very anxious to find a story for Miss Frederick which will enable him to continue transporting her about the studio.

MARGUERITE CLARK looked on with sadness, while the special theatre which had been erected for her in the Famous Players studio was being demolished. The theatre was built for the stage scenes in the Famous Players-Paramount adaptation of Molly Elliott Seawell's play "The Fortunes of Fifi," in which Miss Clark is to star.

"I have not been on the stage since Laurette Taylor, and I played Roman maidens at the Palace for Sarah Bernhardt," said Miss Clark, "and I did enjoy it even if the audience was purely 'paid admission'—meaning paid for being an audience."

AND now comes Max Linder to the fore. Yest, he has only followed the fashion of many charming ladies and estimable actors in harboring a pet, but Max has either "out-fadded" faddists, or else his press agent is unusually gifted.

At any rate, Max is said to have a dog—a dog with a wooden leg. "Wah" is the name, and "Wah" served with Max in the dispatch bearers' corps in the great war. At the battle of the Aisne the dog's foreleg was shot off and Linder was wounded at the same time. Later the comedian caused the best surgeon in Paris to fit "Wah" with a hickory leg and aluminum attachments.

PAUL EVERTON, one of Broadway's best known "heavy" men and character actors, has been engaged by Frank Powell for a prominent part in the support of Marjorie Rambeau in "Motherhood," the second of the series of Marjorie Rambeau pictures now being made by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, to be distributed through Mutual.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS gave a party at the New York Algonquin Hotel, New York, ten days ago in honor of Mary Pickford, who departed a few days later for the Pacific coast. Many of prominence in the theatrical and screen world, were guests of smiling Doug, who entertained with some of his new athletic stunts.

N. B. "Little Mary" had a new frock for the occasion.

RENE GUISSART, the cameraman who will photograph Mary Garden's first Goldwyn picture under the direction of Allan Dwan, is a hero of the battle of the Somme, and wears a medal awarded him by the French Government for valor in action during the early days of what is now one of the longest battles in history.

Guissart, in command of a gun crew, had all of his aides killed around him, and operated a machine gun without aid or support, while entirely cut off from the remainder of the troops with whom he was operating. His valor in standing by his gun enabled him to stand off a group of invaders who menaced the section of the line he was holding. Just as a detachment came to his support, he was shot through the lung, and this wound retired him.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

THE presence of President Carl Laemmle, and the expected arrival of P. A. Powers, treasurer, have not caused any noticable change at Universal City. The twenty-six companies continue with production as though the chiefs were across the continent.

Mr. Laemmle advised that his trip to California, was just to get away from the disagreeable cold of the East, and it goes without saying that Los Angeles papers were glad to mention this fact. He stated that the principal purpose of his long journey was to watch the new system of production along efficiency lines installed by General Manager H. O. Davis at U City.

Rumors have it that Mr. Laemmle is connected in one way or another with a number of new film companies about to be organized. One is said to have J. Warren Kerrigan as star, another Cleo Madison who recently signed a contract to appear in multiple reel subjects for Louis Jacobs, and another which links the name of Blanche Sweet. It is further stated by those who hear the rumors that Lois Weber, whose contract with the Universal expires in April, has made a contract which specifies a salary of $5,000 weekly, and that the pictures will be made for an organization in which Mr. Laemmle is the dominant financial factor. Other rumors of less importance are also to be heard. None of the above could be verified.

THE Universal scenario department has been increased by the addition of Waldemar Young, former San Francisco newspaper man, who has written several successful vaudeville sketches, and served a number of years as dramatic critic; and Colonel Brady, formerly head of the Vitagraph scenario department at the Brooklyn studio.

Director Charles Swickard is to continue with Mary MacLaren as his star, and will next produce a drama of society life in Paris and America, written by J. Grubb Alexander. This may be titled "Her Great Adventure," the name under which it is known at present. Mr. Swickard has just filmed the "Plow Woman" with Miss MacLaren.

The Lois Weber production "Even as You and I," has been completed, and Ben Wilson and Mignon Anderson have been assigned to other directors. The former with Neva Gerber will play leads in the additional episodes to be made by Director Stuart Paton of the "Voice on the Wire" series of two-reel mystery stories. Miss Anderson has been cast as lead in the next picture to be made by Rupert Julian. Maude George, who played a prominent part in the Weber picture, has concluded her contract with the Universal, and has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to play in support of William Desmond in a picture to be made by Director Walter Edwards.

Telegrams from the New York office of the Universal have caused a new order of cutting of the comedy dramas made by Director Raymond Wells with Jack Mulhall as star. These pictures are now cut or edited as the scenes are made, so the finished negative may be shipped to New York as soon as completed. This manner of speedy editing followed demands of exhibitors for these subjects. Director Wells has just made the final scenes for "Jimmy Dolan, Prince," a mythical kingdom story.

GENERAL MANAGER H. O. DAVIS has written his first story for the screen, which has been prepared in scenario form by Bess Meredyth, a staff author. It is titled "Bringing Father Home." The production will be filmed under the direction of William Worthington, with Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon as leads.

Allen Holubar, having completed the five-reel picture "The Reward of His Government" is next to make a play adapted from the Brand Whitlock story, "The Field of Honor." This is to be in five reels.

Director George Marshall has written the scenario for a three-reel Western drama which he is now producing. It is known as "The Foreman of Circle W," and Neal Hart plays the name part.

The Nestorites, Eddie, Lee, Edyth, Nolan and Chaudet the director, are busy with the "Villainous Visitor," which gives Moran an eccentric character part. The story was written by "Pop" Hoadley and Fred Palmer, whom the company have adopted as their regular writers.

Tom Santschi (Selig)

W. W. BEAUDINE and the Joker organization, discovered Monday night they had not made a policeman comedy in six months. Passing this information along to Jack Cunningham, who has been writing comedies exclusively for this company, they were presented with a scenario providing cops galore, the following morning. The name of it is "Gone—But Where?".

Emory Johnson, little Zoe Rae and Mignon Anderson, are to be the leads in the five-reel subject, "A Dime's Worth of Philosophy," which is to be made by Rupert Julian in five reels.

"The Fair Masquerader" is the name given a one-reel subject now in the making by Director George Cochrane, who has Molly Malone, Roberta Wilson, Lee Hill and Jay Morris Foster as principals.

THE north feature stage, 100 x 190 feet, is completely covered with an interior Alaskan setting, which is the largest of its kind ever built on the west coast. In the story, "The Code of the Klondike," written and being filmed by Lynn Reynolds, this serves as a dance hall, gambling resort, saloon, buffet and lobby of the hotel. There are no partitions in the setting, which makes possible a great amount of action in all portions during the scenes made here. Myrtle Gonzalez is the star of this picture, with a supporting cast headed by George Hernandez. Jean Hersholt and others. The exteriors were made at Truckee recently.

"Little Miss Sunshine" is a three-reel photoplay in which Ruth Stonehouse is playing the lead as well as directing.

Mrs. E. M. Singleton, who has been connected with the U scenario department, has been appointed director at U City, and will first film a five-reel subject titled "Devotion," scenes of which are laid in England. Fritzi Ridgeway has been selected as the star for this picture.

THE display of creative ability on the part of Victor Schertzinger during his twenty months connection with Thomas H. Ince studios, this week brought to the talented musician the position as director at the Ince studios. He was first assigned to directing the filming of the new Charles Ray serial comic of the baseball diamond, from original scenarios written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Mr. Schertzinger first became affiliated with Mr. Ince at the Inceville plant to prepare musical accompaniments for Triangle Kay-Bee plays. He continued at this work until last Spring when he went East with Mr. Ince to supervise the musical programs at the important presentations of "Civilization."

Thomas H. Ince has drawn another leading woman from the ranks of the legitimate stage in the person of Sylvia Bremer. Miss Bremer is an Australian, but has been in America for several years. Her most recent work was in support of Grace George in Bernard Shaw's "Major Barbara."

C. Gardner Sullivan has prepared an original comedy drama which will serve as the next play in which Enid Bennett is starred. Reginald Barker will be in charge of filming this subject. Mr. Barker has just completed the last scenes for a new Louise Glaum Triangle Kay-Bee play from the pen of Monte M. Katterjohn. The supporting cast includes J. Barney Sherry, Roy Laidlaw, Thos. Guise, and others.

TO a few of his intimate friends, William S. Hart this week tipped off that he was going to stage the thriller of his film playing career, and the few who were fortunate in witnessing it, claim the star was not exaggerating. Mr. Hart allowed his famous Pinto pony "Fritz" to roll with him down a two hundred foot embankment in a manner prescribed by the scenario written by Lambert Hillyer. In this picture Margery Wilson appears as the leading woman.

Dorothy Dalton is having her first vacation in many a moon, and being a Chicago girl, she is hunting a Winter climate, and is spending several days at the Winter resort on the top of Mount Baldy. Miss Dalton has just completed her performance in a picture made under the direction of Charles Miller.

Louis Brown, vice-president of the Orpheum theatre circuit, was this week the guest of the Ince studios at Culver City and Inceville, where he met a number of the players who formerly aided in making the Orpheum program. As with many others, the visit of Mr. Brown was a revelation, and he expressed his amazement at the size and stability of the Ince producing plant, which is now frequently referred to as the most complete in the world.

WILFRED LUCAS is at it again. He has come to believe the managers of the Fine Arts studio wish to see him battered to pieces, for in practically every one of the pictures in which he plays, he has been given a semi-pugilistic role. At present he takes the part of a gigantic Greek, who does all sorts of strenuous physical stunts in the drama temporarily titled "A Love Sublime," which is adapted from the short story, "Orpheus," by Samuel Hopkins Adams. Carmel Meyers appears as his sweetheart, Alice Ray the sculptor, Jack Brammall the crook, James O'Shey as policeman, and Fred Turner in the difficult character part of the professor.

It is also evident an attempt is being made to force all the leading men of the Fine Arts staff to become athletes, or at least proficient in the manly art. Kenneth Harlan, lead opposite Constance Talmadge in the melodramatic comedy, "Betsy's Burglar," was this week pitted against Elmo Lincoln, who appeared as chief of the gangsters, and for five hours they fought. Lincoln is the giant who interpreted the part of the Mighty Man of Valor in Griffith's "Intolerance." The principals were physical wrecks when Director Paul Powell gave the final O. K. to the fight stuff scenes.

Frank E. Woods is not only proving himself competent for the position as manager of production, but is also leading the scenario department a very merry clip in the matter of writing original stories for the screen. He is the author of "Betsy's Burglar," "The Bad Boy" and "A Young Gentleman of the Old School," as well as another play, which will serve as a vehicle for Seena Owen, who is working under the direction of Chester Withey, the title of which has not been announced.

FOLLOWING several days of tests, Director Rollin S. Sturgeon has begun the filming of the first Gail Kane Mutual subject, "Whose Wife?" The story for this was adapted for the screen by Doris Schroeder. Miss Kane is reported to have brought with her from New York ten trunks of stylish new gowns.

The starting of the production of the first release of the second Mary Miles Minter American Mutual series, "Lizz," was this week the cause of a celebration by members of the company, which occurred at the end of the first day of production. Those participating were: James Kirkwood, George Fisher, Harvey Clark, George Periolat, Emma Kluge, Margaret Shelby, Arthur Howard, Lucille Ward, Al. and Jack Vosburg.

A day or two more of filming, and the current William Russell American Mutual picture, "High Play," will be completed. This subject, up to this time, has been in production eleven days, and the making of the picture by Director Edward Sloman in this short time, is spoken of as record-breaking and efficient. The reorganization of production departments of the studio by President S. S. Hutchinson, is said to have made possible this speedy work.

AT the Signal studio, it is claimed, the scenario for the second episode of the "Railroad Raiders," consisting of two reels, contains more plot than many a five-reeler now on the market. The story pertains to the operations of two separate gangs of crooks, each independent of the other, working to victimize a railroad company. It is a case of crook meet crook when they learn the true situation, and thus considerable comedy is brought about.

So favorable has been the comment on the night lighting effects in past Signal subjects, J. P. McGowan has instructed his technical director, Clyde Roe, and assistants to organize an experimental laboratory to work out additional effects.

Helen Holmes has been ill for the past few days with tonsilitis, owing to exposure in the making of the first episode. All the other members of the company have withstood the exposure without illness.

Virgil Hart, who has been a member of the Signal Stock Company, was this week selected by J. P. McGowan as his assistant director in the making of future Helen Holmes subjects.

THE Horsley Cub Comedy Company reached the three-quarters of a century mark this week, when the one-reel subject, "Jerry's Romance," was completed. In all seventy-five subjects made to date, George Ovey has been the featured comedian, and Milton Fahrney the director. In this number also, George George, who was recently injured in an auto accident which caused his withdrawal from the cast, was able to resume his work.

Production of the fourth of the Morals of Men Series of five-reel productions, "The Eye of Envy," was begun this week by Crane Wilbur and company at the Horsley studio. The cast for this number has not been wholly selected, and will be announced shortly.

There is a new star in the David Horsley organization who arrived in this world January 26. The producer of Cub Comedies and Centaur Features, advises that no naming contest is to be conducted this year, and—and—mother and daughter are doing well.

THE third two-reel episode of the new Kalem series, "The American Girl," separately titled, "The Fate of Juan Garcia," has been completed, and production work is now being engaged in on the fourth, "The Lost Legion of the Border." Director James Horne continues in charge of making the new series, with Marin Sais in the name part. Edward Hearn, Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, and others continue as the principal players.

Scott Sidney, formerly identified as director with the Ince forces, who later made two subjects at the Morosco-Pallas studios, has been engaged to direct future productions of the new Kalem railroad series, to be known as "The Daughter of Daring." This series of one-reel subjects are to succeed the "Hazards of Helen," which have run for more than two years. Helen Gibson, who has been featured in the "Hazards" subjects, is to continue as featured player in the new pictures, and it is very probable that all other supporting members will be retained.

The Kalem Ham Comedy Company has worked at the Glendale studios several days this week, using the Mexican and Western street sets for scenes for the coming single-reeler in which Ham and Bud appear as bullfighters. This is under the direction of Al. Santell.

William Pigott, formerly of the scenario department of the American studio at Santa Barbara is now a member of the staff at the Kalem Glendale plant.

THE capital punishment subject, "Who Shall Take My Life?" now being filmed at the Selig plant, requires prison scenes, and the three leading players, Tom Santchi, Bessie Eyton and Harry Lonsdale, together with Colin Campbell and cameraman, went to the San Quentin penitentiary by boat the early part of the week.

Selig production forces were increased this week by Director Al. Green, who has been working at the Chicago studio of the company. Included in the number of subjects made in the East were "The Princess of Patches," which is shortly to be released. Accompanying Director Green were George Fawcett, Vivian Reed, Charles Le Moyne and Harry Newman, the cameraman. Mr. Green also brought with him a number of scenarios, and will shortly take up the filming of the first subject.

ROBERT THORNBY has been engaged as director by the Lasky Company, and is expected on the Coast shortly to begin the filming of his first subject.

George Proctor, scenario writer at the Lasky studio, was taken ill Monday of the past week with appendicitis, and has since been ill at his home in Hollywood, but is now said by his physician to be out of danger. Mr. Proctor was formerly a member of the editorial staff of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

THE last scenes for the Universal serial, "The Purple Mask," were made at the Stern Film Company studio, Saturday, February 3, by the Ford-Cunard Company, which has been engaged in the production of the sixteen-episode picture for the past five months. No announcement has been made as to what class of pictures will next be taken up by this company.

A burlesque on the best known play of the American stage, dear old "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is being made at the L-Ko studio by Director "Kitty" Howe. This has Phil Dunham, Lucile Hutton and Charles Inslee as leads.

Director General Jack Blystone is filming another melodramatic comedy, with Alice Howell as lead.

The butler is coming into his own. The wee bits he has had in past screen subjects have caused Al. E. Christie to see his value, and so a forthcoming Christie comedy of one reel has been named for the Hinglishman "'Awkins." Neal Burns is the featured player in the subject, with Billie Rhodes as the leading woman opposite him.

Director Christie is now making "Twice in the Same Place," from scenario by Joseph Poland. He has selected Billie Rhodes, Eddie Barry, Ethel Lynne, Jay Belasco and George French for the title parts. It is an artist story in which Billie Rhodes refuses to marry the boy from across the hall, Belasco, for she is wed to her art.

REHEARSALS have been started at the Fox studio for the next William Farnum subject to be made by Director Frank Lloyd. This is titled, "The Scarlet Pimpernel."

Doris Pawn, who has been with the Universal recently, and who appeared as lead with George Walsh in "Blue Blood and Red," made early last year, has been reengaged, and will play opposite Walsh under the direction of Otis Turner. Anna Luther, who has been playing lead for Mr. Turner, has gone to the Ince studios where she began work February 5.

Richard Stanton has taken up a new picture with Gladys Brockwell and Ralph Lewis in the featured parts. The original scenario provided a double role for Miss Brockwell, but after she read the script, she pointed out how the story could be produced to better advantage if a double role was not provided.

All five of the Fox comedy companies under the direction of Hank Mann, Tom Mix, Walter Reid, and Harry Edwards, finished their pictures at the same time, and within the next few days will take up new ones.

THE Christie Film Company promises their patrons for February and March eight decidedly clever comedies of the parlor type. The first week will see "Small Change," and following this in order will come "Oh For A Wife," "Hubby's Night Out," and "Kidding Sister." The March releases will be "As Luck Would Have It," "His Flirting Ways," "Sauce For The Goose," and "Love and The Ice-Man."

Owing to illness, General Manager Dwight Whiting has not been able to visit the studios of the Rolin Comedy Company since the first of January, but production continues by the efficient staff there. Director Hal Roach has Lonesome Luke Harold Lloyd pitted against a gangster in a subject described as "a low-down white trash picture." Luke experiences his first actual knock-out. A number of the scenes were made in a big dance hall set with a number of extras, and on two afternoons when work was stopped because of rain, the orchestra and players all assembled in the green room of the studio where afternoon dances were enjoyed. Old fashioned Virginia reel, Paul Jones, and nearly every style of modern dance was participated in.

Sapphire Speight, who is said to have recently arrived in America from Australia, has been added to the stock company of the Rolin comedy makers, and will shortly be seen in lead parts.

In the coming Selig production, "Beware of Strangers," Fritzi Brunette will make her debut as a vampire, and the role is described as not the hard cruel kind, but of a likeable character. The subject was recently completed by Colin Campbell.

THE Nestorites, Eddie, Lee, Edith and Director Chaudet with Harry Nolan and Fred A. Gamble, have "adopted" two scenario writers, C. B. (Pop) Hoadley and Frederick Palmer. Both have had considerable experience in the comedy scenario line, Mr. Hoadley having been connected with eastern studios and came to the Coast and served a long time with Selig, and was later with the American. Palmer was identified with the Keystone and Vogue following several years newspaper work.

Lynn Reynolds and company of Universal players, are home from two weeks at Truckee, California, with a great quantity of very exceptional Winter film, and every one is in a congratulatory frame of mind, as none of the film exposed by Cameraman Clyde R. Cook was injured by static.

Title for the anti-capital punishment subject, originally "The Lieutenant Governor," has been changed to "No Respecter of Persons." Replicas of cells, corridors and the death chamber of Sing Sing prison, have been built for use in this subject. Charles Pearle and Director Mong take the leading masculine roles, and Mrs. Townsen, age seventy-two, plays a very important part.

The Canadian drama, "His Mother's People," being filmed under the direction of Henry McRae, took the company to San Bernardino and also Elizabeth Lake for Winter scenes. Mr. McRae has Frank Mayo and Claire McDowell as his leads, with Eddie Polo, and Charles Mailes in important character roles.

GEORGE OVEY again has the support of his tiny leading woman, Claire Alexander, who has entirely recovered from the illness which compelled her to abandon work for several weeks.

Harrish Ingram, a member of the Crane Wilbur company, who has a number of published stories to his credit, is turning his literary talents to scenario production in his spare moments and very likely some of his works will be picturized at the David Horsley Studios.

Hollywood Hookum

Feb. 24, 1917 NEWS MORE NEWS

RUMORS ! RUMORS !! RUMORS !!!

So many rumors are to be heard since the arrival of the chiefs of the nation's fourth industry in our midst that one is almost afraid to believe what he hears even during the soup course at one's home.

Hookum office has been under fire for days. The bombardment has been terrific and health - racking. First came the word that Colin Campbell had left Selig to direct Chaplin, and five minutes later a gust of wind brought through our sanctum window a slip of paper bearing the first news of the releasing offices being moved from New York to our fair city. The telephone rang continuously. A confiding friend told us Carl Laemmle had again sold his interests in Universal to Speckles, the Salt Magnate, and U City was to be closed for an inventory.

This was enough to get the entire staff het-up. It was decided dictaphones should be used to confirm the stories set afloat by the imaginative scenario writers and directors, for well we knew no such stories would come from mere actors of the silent stage.

The plan would have worked admirably but for the place being as full of hot air as Chicago streets are of wind. The delicate mechanisms were burned out and took the count of ten in less than that. The following tales were not confirmed:

Jack Kerrigan has resigned with the U.

Doug Fairbanks has accepted a $2,500 per week ten-year contract.

C. Gardner Sullivan was placed under contract to write only tragedy.

Lyons and Moran will next produce Shakespeare's "Othello" in a serial of fifteen two-reel episodes.

The first Mabel Normand Company subject, "Mickey," has been finished.

Geraldine Farrar has sued the Lasky company for railroad fare to and from L. A.

D. W. Griffith will not answer in New York a 'phone message from Los Angeles.

William Farnum and Hank Mann are to play in comedy together for Fox.

The fifty-million-dollar corporation formed for the manufacture of crepe hair for motion picture production has been dissolved by the Supreme Court.

Six days of sunshine.

Pat Powers is coming.

Mack Sennett's duck hunting at Calexico.

H. Aitken is reported to sing Westward Ho!

Charlie Kessel used his N. Y.-L. A. commutation ticket this week.

Howard Crampton, U actor, is a freak. He admits and affirms he can't swim a stroke.

Mayor Herb Rawlinson, since buying a new car, has fixed the speed limit in U City at 110.

J. Pep McGowan admits his daily dread to be that members will come in from a scene with white hair. Some thrillers.

A photograph of Louise Fazenda in a Los Angeles art store caused a night prowler to break the glass and steal the picture.

Of the twenty-eight members of the Signal Company, twenty-seven owned automobiles, and Leo D. Maloney is said to have been bitten by the gasoline bug.

The LaSalle Company's mascot, a polkadot pig, originally named Julius Caesar, has been discovered to be a vampire, and so her name has been changed to Seraphina.

Ed. Ring and Alice Lake, those Keystone leads, danced themselves to fame at Vermen Country Club this week, being awarded a silver loving cup with chamois skin covering.

Walt. Edwards has decorated his office with a program of the Star theatre when he was leading man in "Master and Man." Memories of those days should not be sacred Walt, you're a leadin' man yet.

Edward Dillon, the leading advocate of home rule of the film colony, when interviewed on present-day demands for realism, voiced his regret that things were not as they used to be, when an Irishman cannot be used in Indian pictures.

Vic. Miller came to California on a honeymoon trip, and now he's cameraman for the Balboa. Besides this distinction, he made a tour around the world with the Giants and White Sox, and exposed film on an expedition through South America.

Barney Sherry is popular. Casey, Ince studio electrician, for weeks sought an autographed photograph, and now he has one that he prizes dearly. Barney wrote: "And the Lord said to Casey, 'Let there be light, and there was light.'"

Our city council is considering prohibiting movies from working in the street in short skirts. Helen Gilmore, Cub comedienne, destroyed the efficiency of a gang of water-main trench diggers, and this is said to be the cause of the proposed legislation.

Hank McRae had one of his actors pose as a plain clothes man and arrest a Los Angeles millionaire who was watching 'em make 'em. All the air about U City was turned blue, and the cigar counter looked like a cyclone had struck it. Hank's some financier.

C. Laemmle's in town.

Bill Fox is expected.

Julius Stern is home from New York.

Charlie Baumann is here on a visit.

Jno. Frueler of Milwaukee is with us.

Bev. Griffith is down on the Rio Grande to catch a few scenes for the U Weekly.

David Horsley has decided to have his autoped remade so that it may be used as a perambulator.

Bessie Barriscale has bobbed her hair in front, and so it is expected bangs will become popular throughout the land.

Cono is the name of C. Spence Chaplin's Japanese chauffeur. Maybe the name originated from the same sources as the word Kiddo.

A man in Jamaica learning that George Walsh received a pink silk shirt for Xmas, has sent him a pink pearl. The man didn't know George's shirt faded.

Dusty Farnum found the rapids of the Merced River stronger than his arms, and so was given an ice-cold plunge. Dusty liked it so well it's a habit now.

Big Bill Russell was the host of an after-theatre dinner at Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara, for the "Fair and Warmer" company. We bet the dinner was even more than fair and warmer.

Ottie Turner, Frankie Lloyd and Hankie Mann this week were learning to count, they having taken up one of the r's because of double exposure stuff at the Fox studio.

A big horned billygoat of Universal zoo didn't like the way Harry Carey practiced bulldogging it, and when the actor wasn't looking—well, it got his goat and he landed about ten feet away.

Kathleen Clifford, new Balboa star, appeared in the uniform of a British colonel at a Belgium relief fund bazar, and a pleasant old lady complimented her as being "the cunninest page in the hotel."

Jean Lewis, who was getting fat on his job of scenario editor at U City, has decided to quit his dieting, for the other day he met Donald McGregor, the Scotch giant, who is eight feet in height and tips the beam at 463 pounds.

A. Carlos is going to cause an increase in the cost of production. He has promised Gladys Brockwell a dressing suite of seven rooms — library, boudoir, wardrobe, parlor, dining room, kitchen, ba-a-th. All stars will be making similar demands.

Tom Mix shot down Pat Cristman in cold blood. Death was instantaneous. At the coroner's inquest held at a morgue, the victim arose and testified. That's the way the Fox film western comedian initiated Charles Girard, who still drops his h's.

A seer whose specialty is reading the thoughts of one by seeing their signature, is to be employed a day a week at the Ince studio to look over the letters that accompany scrips, if the recommendation of Spence Valentine, the purchasing agent, is followed.

Knute Rhamn, Kalem player, was knocked cold this week when a heavy piece of timber hit him on the head. Members of the staff rushed wildly about calling for water, and Knute's criticism was that if it took that much of a knockout to get water, what would it take for a real drink.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Works of O. Henry to Be Filmed by Vitagraph

General Film Will Release Screen Versions of Great Humorist and Dramatist's Stories Beginning March 3

PICTURIZATIONS of the best of O. Henry's short stories will be released by the General Film Company, commencing March 3. The stories will be two-reel Broadway Star Features, and will be made by the Vitagraph Company. The first release will be based on the story "Past One at Rooney's," and will feature a number of the best known picture stars.

The volumes of O. Henry's works from which the cream is to be skimmed for this series are "Cabbages and Kings," "The Four Million," "The Gentle Grafter," "The Heart of the West," "The Man Higher Up," "Options," "Roads of Destiny," "Rolling Stones," "Sixes and Sevens," "Strictly Business," "The Trimmed Lamp," "The Voice of the City," and "Whirligigs."

It is felt by General Film that this announcement is of more than ordinary interest to exhibitor and screen fan. In literature the name of O. Henry is one to conjure with. His stories were "different," and millions of fiction lovers constantly demand the various volumes containing the great array of his works.

It has been said of O. Henry, and truly, that he saw romance in everything. The shop girl, the cowboy's life, the city loafer, all conveyed a message to the writer. His stories of New York life were both thrilling and pathetic. The producers of these works on the screen promise that careful attention will be paid to faithful reproduction in every detail.

O. Henry's real name, which long remained a mystery to the reading public, was William Sydney Porer. He was born in Greensboro, North Carolina, September 11, 1862, and died in New York, June 5, 1910. His early years were spent as a clerk in a country drug store, and as cowboy and ranger in Texas. He married in 1887, eloping with Miss Athol Estes against her parents' wishes. He began writing about this time.

In 1895 began a dark period in the great author's life, when, on a charge later disproven, he served a prison term. During this period his wife died. In 1907 he again married, and died in 1910.

Two Selig Dramas on General Film Program

A multiple reel Selig production, "The Redemption of Red Mullin," is announced for release through General Film Service. The picture was written by Edwin Arden and produced by Otis B. Thayer, and is said to contain a number of unusual situations.

George Fawcett is to be exploited in another of the Selig shorter length subjects, "For Reward of Service," directed by Al Green. Charles LeMoyne and other well-known players will be in the supporting cast.

Two Triangle Features March 4

Constance Talmadge and Dorothy Dalton are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for March 4. Miss Talmadge will appear in a Fine Arts comedy-drama entitled "Betsy's Burglar," written by Frank E. Woods and directed by Paul Powell. Dorothy Dalton will be accorded unusual opportunities for displaying her versatility in "Back of the Man," written by Monte M. Katterjohn and directed by Reginald Barker, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Fannie Ward and Mae Murray in Paramount Releases

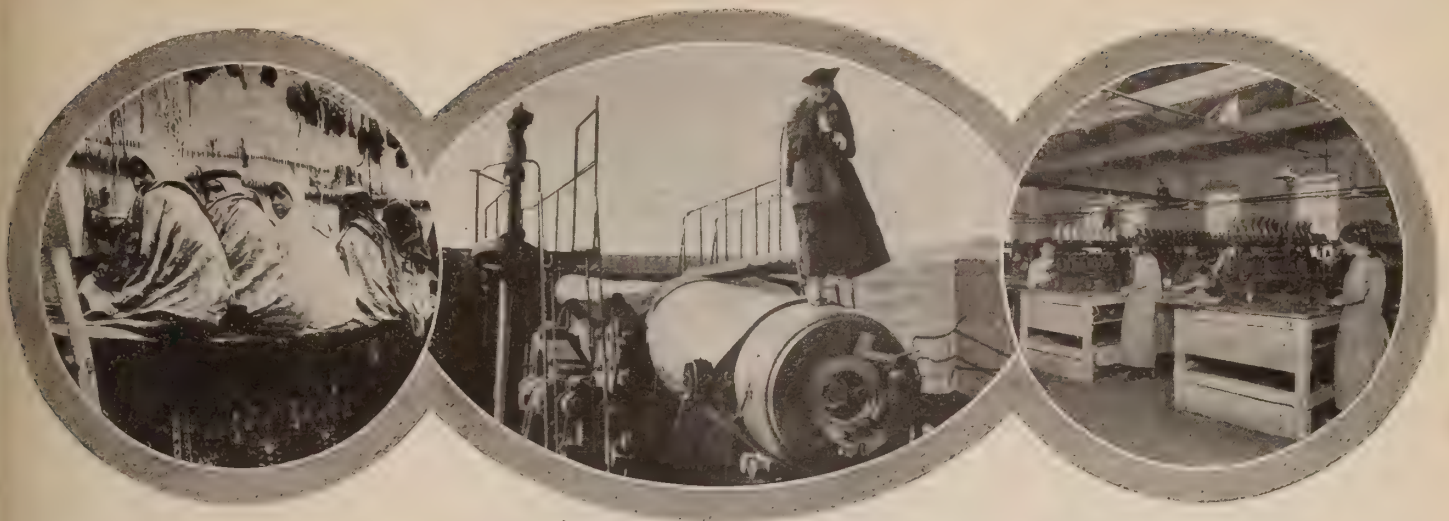
Two Lasky productions will head the Paramount Program for the week of February 19; "The Winning of Sally Temple," in which Fannie Ward plays the leading role, and "On Record," in which Mae Murray will be the star.

"The Winning of Sally Temple" is based upon Rupert Sargent Holland's novel, "The Heart of Sally Temple."

The production was prepared for the screen especially for Miss Ward by Harvey F. Thew. The star is seen as a hoydenish, sympathetic young actress of London of the period of 1770.

Others prominent in the cast are Horace B. Carpenter, Walter Long, Paul Wiegel, Eugene Pallette, Florence Smythe and others. The production was made for the Lasky Company by George Melford.

"On Record" is the first production that Mae Murray will have appeared in since her recent marriage. In the cast with Miss Murray are Emmett Flynn, Henry A. Barrows, Louis Morrison, Charles Ogle, Bliss Chevalier, Gertrude Maitland, Jane Wolf, Mrs. Lewis McCord and Lucien Littlefield.



Surrounding the program for this week are four single-reel features: the 54th edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the 55th of the series of Weekly Trips Around the World, personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes a visit to the Stony Indians, and a Black Diamond comedy entitled, "Her Scrambled Ambition."

Four Fox Comedies in February

Foxfilm Comedy releases for February are, "The Cloud Puncher," with Hank Mann; "Chased Into Love," with Hank Mann; "There's Many a Fool," with Hank Mann and Carmen Phillips, and "The House of Terrible Scandals."

On Either Side is Mary Anderson in "The Dangers of Doris," While the Center Shows May Maurice and James Morrison in "The Seventh Son," a Special Edition of a Civil War Vitagraph Featuring Ralph Ince as Lincoln

Gaumont Releases Interesting Scenic Films

The capital of beleaguered Austria and the battlefields of Chickamauga and Chattanooga are among the entertaining pictures coming from the Gaumont studios, Flushing, N. Y., during the week of February 25 through Mutual. The former is of interest because of the history that is being made there, the latter furnish material for comparison.

The first release of the week is "Reel Life," No. 43, February 25. It shows the making of "Dainty Perfume," "Teaching Children to Swim," "Logging in Louisiana" and "Making Bottles at Home."

February 27 brings to the screen "Tours Around the World," No. 17. Vienna is the most important contributor to this reel, but there are excellent pictures also of the Gota Elf River, Sweden, and the city of Toledo, Spain.

There are two releases from the Gaumont studios, February 28. These are Mutual Weekly, No. 114 and the split-reel, "See America First," No. 78 and the Gaumont Kartoon Komic. "See America First" will show the Battlefields of Chickamauga and Chattanooga, both bloody conflicts of the Civil War. The cartoon is called "The Elusive Idea."

Grand Canyon Filmed by "U"

Universal will release early in March a film of the Grand Canyon, entitled the "Grand Canyon Scenic." Universal cameramen spent several weeks in the canyon and shot scenes from every available point. Only the very best views were used in the completed film, which is tinted to match the gorgeous colors of the canyon as near as possible.

Petrova's Next Picture Feb. 26

Metro Pictures Corporation will release February 26 "The Secret of Eve," a five-part feature screen play with Mme. Petrova as star, written by Aaron Hoffman, directed by Perry Vekroff, and produced by Popular Plays and Players.

The supporting cast includes William L. Hinckley, Florence Moore, Edward Roseman, Laurie Mackin and George Morrell.

Chinese Picture Heads Week's Universal Program

Native Players Only Appear in Story; Laughable L-Ko and Several Imp Society Dramas Among Other Features

A DISTINCTLY novel and interesting feature, "The War of the Tongs," which will appear under the Red Feather brand is the leading release of the Universal program for the week of February 19. This is an unique photodrama in that the entire cast is Chinese, and the story was written by a Chinese. The leading roles are played by members of the Imperial Chinese players, and the work of the Oriental actors compares favorably with that of the best known American screen stars.

For what is said to be the first time in the history of screen productions, the customs of the Chinese, in their homes, stores and secret societies are shown by native performers. The inner workings of the tongs, and the Chinese gambling houses are faithfully depicted.

"The Great Torpedo Secret," a Gold Seal three-act comedy drama, featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Neva Gerber is the chief offering for Tuesday, February 20. This photodrama was produced by Stuart Paton, director of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," from the scenario by E. B. Lewis. In the cast supporting the stars are Howard Crampton, Adele Woods, Frank Tokanaga, Mrs. Crampton and Frances Mayon. "The Fireman's Bride," a Victor comedy drama with Matt Moore and Jane Gail is the other offering of this date.

On Wednesday, February 21 the L-Ko two-part comedy "After the Balled Up Ball," is scheduled on the list. The funmakers are Phil Dunham, Lucille Hutton and Merta Sterling. The Universal Animated Weekly with timely news in pictorial form and the Laemmle drama, "Sin Unatoned," with Robert Leonard and Margarita Fischer are other releases on the 21st.

The first of a series of Mary Ann stories, "The Heart of Mary Ann," written and produced by Ruth Stonehouse, and in which she plays the principal role will appear on Thursday, February 22. This is a one-act comedy drama which has been well spoken of by studio folk.

The Big U two-part war drama, "The Man Who Saved the Day," with Wallace Reid and Pauline Bush as the featured players, and the Rex drama, "The Keeper of the Gate," with Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Clifford are also scheduled for release on this date.

"The Folly of Fanchette," a two-act Imp drama of society and the underworld, produced by John McDermott from the story by Harry B. Hagenah is the leading offering of Friday, February 23. Mae Bush and Malcolm Blevins have the leading roles. The Victor comedy, "A Bare Living," featuring Eileen Sedgwick and Ralph McComas and the Big U Indian drama, "Heroes of the Plains," will also be released on Friday.

Charles E. Van Loan, the noted short story writer is the author of the Bison two-act Western drama, "The Comeback," which will be presented Saturday, February 24. The Joker comedy, "Rosie's Rancho," with Gale Henry and William Franey will appear on the same day.

The feature release for Sunday, February 25, is the Imp two-part drama "A Dangerous Double," written by Harry Dittmar, and produced by Robert F. Hill. This is a story of newspaper life with Sidney Bracey and Sydell Dowling playing the leads. The Rex drama "Lost in the Streets of Paris," with King Baggot and Leah Baird and the Powers split-reel "A Day in the Life of a Dog," a comedy cartoon, and the Buried Treasures of Ceylon, a Dorsey animated travelogue complete the week's program.

"A Strange Discovery," the ninth episode of the Grace Cunard-Francis Ford serial "The Purple Mask," will appear during the week.

Northrup Is Now with Metro

H. S. Northrup has been engaged to play Glendon, the arch-conspirator, in Lionel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro-Columbia production, as yet unnamed, which was written by June Mathis.

Kalem's Two Series Ready by March 1

For the benefit of those exhibitors who have not had an opportunity to get into communication with their exchanges since it was announced that the Kalem Company would shortly market two new series productions—a two-part and a single-reel series—Kalem announces that the initial episodes of both can be booked now for showing about the first of the month.

The title selected for the first complete story chapter of "A Daughter of Daring" is "In the Path of Peril," from a story by Herman A. Blackman, featuring Miss Helen Gibson. Not only is the main theme said to be refreshingly new, but several genuine novelties have been incorporated into this release in particular the wrecking of a train in a most unusual manner.

The first of the Bechdolt stories, each a complete two-part production starring Miss Marin Sais, and released under the series title of "The American Girl," will be called "The Black Rider of Tasajara."

The element of mystery is cleverly worked out to keep audiences guessing the identity of the Black Rider until near the close of the second part.

Walthall's Latest Play Hailed as Best

What is claimed to be one of the best feature productions ever put out by Essanay is nearly ready for the screen. It is "Burning the Candle," Henry B. Walthall's latest play.

Only a few scenes remain to complete the filming process of "Burning the Candle." The story contains a powerful lesson on the liquor theme. It presents the emotional actor as a young Southerner whose lips have never before tasted alcohol suddenly confronted with the death-dealing temptations of the saloon and cafe cocktail. He succumbs to the lure, and his passion for drink, becoming suddenly inflamed, drags him to the depths of depravity. He loses his position in a New York cotton broker's office, and his young bride quits him.

An appealing love plot runs through the story, and is the saving motive which results in the final happiness of the young Southerner and his wife.

Mary Charleston will again be seen as Mr. Walthall's leading lady.

Keystone's Start as Independent Releases February 15

This week marks the first showings of the new Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies as Independent releases. As has been previously announced any exhibitor can get these two-reel Keystones through the nearest Triangle exchange without regard to other Triangle bookings or any other program.

The first of these independently released Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies is "The Nick of Time Baby," which is available February 15.

The following week's release will be "Stars and Bars," with Ford Sterling, Harry Gribbon, Gene Rogers, May Emory and Hugh Fay in the cast.

Irene Howley, Management Wm. A. Sheer (Triangle)

Fox's "Melting Millions," with George Walsh, Feb. 26

George Walsh's fifth starring western film is announced by William Fox as "Melting Millions," to be released Feb. 26. Walsh's role in his newest photoplay is perhaps the most suitable the big star has ever had.

The supporting cast consists of Anna Luther, Velma Whitman, Frank Alexander, Sydney Deane, Cecil Holland and Charles Girard. Otis Turner had charge of the direction.

Dainty Miss Minter at Work on New Series

Mary Miles Minter has just completed the American-Mutual feature, "The Gentle Intruder," and will soon start work on "Environment," the first of a new series of six features to be released through Mutual. The second of this series will be entitled "Annie for Spite."

"Environment" was written by James Kirkwood and will be directed by him. Mr. Kirkwood is also the author of two other of Miss Minter's plays, "Faith" and "The Gentle Intruder." Jack Vosburg, who has just completed his first engagement at American in the juvenile role of William Russell's production, "My Fighting Gentleman," will play opposite Miss Minter.

"Annie for Spite," which will follow "Environment," is an adaptation of a magazine story by Fred Jackson.

Pickford Film Released March 6

The production of Mary Pickford's newest Artcraft Picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," by Eleanor Gates, was completed early last week as far as the star herself is concerned. Several scenes in which "Little Mary" does not appear are now being taken after which the final cutting and assembling will be commenced under the supervision of Director Tourneur at the Fort Lee plant.

The feature is scheduled for release on March 6.

Filmed Stories of Big Writers on Conquest Program

A number of large Edison productions and a short series of railroad life are shortly to be released on the new Conquest Pictures Program.

"The Lance of Kanana," a story of adventure by H. W. French, picture rights of which have been procured by Edison, is to be a leading feature. F. Lovell Coombs has written a number of short stories which will be produced in one-reel length and entitled "The Young Railroaders."

A production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped" has recently been completed, also a picturization of Richard Harding Davis's story, "Gallagher," with Thomas P. Carnahan, Jr., in the leading role.

"Under the Great Bear," written by Kirk Munroe, and "For the Honor of the School," by Ralph Henry Barbour, are other productions which will appear on the Conquest program.

"Pride and the Devil" Next Apollo Release

"Pride and the Devil" is the title of the next Apollo Picture to be released on the Art Dramas program. Richard Ridgely is directing the production, in which Alma Hanlon is starred, and Bigelow Cooper, Leo Delaney and Pamela Vale are seen in the principal supporting parts. The story of "Pride and the Devil" was written by Lawrence McCloskey

It tells of the life of a young couple who come to the city soon after their marriage. The wife soon becomes engrossed in the social activities of the so-called "society" set in New York. An estrangement springs up between husband and wife which eventually leads to the divorce courts, despite the fact that each loves the other, neither is willing to take the initiative toward a reconciliation. Both are possessed of a stubborn pride, and neither is willing to humble it. The woman marries again, this time a worthless social butterfly, who is promptly disinherited by his father, for marrying a divorced woman. The couple go rapidly from bad to worse, and it is not until almost the last scene of the photoplay that redemption for the woman seems a probability.

Alma Hanlon, Bigelow Cooper and Pamela Vale have important roles.

New Pathe Serial with New Star

A new serial star, Molly King, is to make her appearance on March 18. "The Mystery of the Double Cross" will be her vehicle, and is based on the novel, "The Double Cross," by Gilson Willetts. Pathe has filmed the picture which will be exploited by International.

Primarily the latest serial is a mystery subject, with action and thrills in plenty promised. An absorbing love story runs through the plot. Leon Bary, formerly leading man for Sarah Bernhardt, plays opposite Miss King.

Willard Parke has directed the action, which is heralded as being up to the high standards of production that distinguish "Patria" and other Pathe serials.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

Were You Aware That—

Arthur Warde, Chicago manager of "Intolerance," is a son of Frederick Warde, the noted Shakespearean actor now with the Thanhouser forces.

At the annual meeting of the American Bioscope Company, held Tuesday, January 30, the following officers were elected: J. E. Willis, vice-president and general manager; Wilbert B. Kurtz, treasurer, and Edmund P. Kelly, secretary.

Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, recently acquired the Illinois and Indiana rights to "Joan the Woman." The purchase price is said to have been $200,000. The Chicago premier of this photo-spectacle will take place at the Colonial theatre at the termination of the engagement of "Intolerance."

Chicago has been selected as the convention city for the meeting of F. I. L. M. clubs. This convention will be held in about three months. Arrangements are being made by Wm. H. Jenner, manager of the Chicago K. E. S. E. Exchange.

Film road men are agitating the establishment of a social club for film salesmen with headquarters at Chicago.

Major Funkhauser, head of Chicago's Censor Board, threatens the revoking of the "Pink Permit" law. He claims that many Chicago theatres are violating restrictions imposed on these films by admitting persons under twenty-one years of age.

Frank Robinson, a Chicago exhibitor, was attacked and shot by a masked man in the basement of the Kimball theatre. It is declared that recent labor troubles among theatre employes were responsible for the attack.

Two and three reel dramas are now being produced at the local Selig studios under the direction of Otis B. Thayer.

The Legislative Committee of the F. I. L. M. Club met at the Hotel Morrison on January 30 to discuss the proposed tax on theatres.

C. W. Bunn, manager of the local Pathe office, has appointed W. Hamm to the position of router. Mr. Hamm's duties will consist in following the exact whereabouts of all films shipped from the office. This new position was necessitated by the laxness of the express companies.

Morris Jastrow, Jr., author of the "Civilization of Babylon and Assyria," has given David W. Griffith a very valuable engraved plaque excavated from the ruins of Babylon. This gift was made in recognition of Mr. Griffith's remarkable presentation of the city's glory in "Intolerance." Chas. Lindlar, the wideawake local P. A. for "Intolerance," intends to bring this tablet to Chicago for exhibition here.

Joseph Hopp, President M. P. E. L. of A., Chicago Local

The managers of the Western branch offices of the General Film Company held a session here February 2 and 3. Benjamin Hampton, president of the company, discussed with the managers the policy of the company for the coming year.

R. H. Hadfield, who with his cousin, Harry E. Aitken, opened the second motion picture theatre in Chicago some twelve years ago, and has been connected in different capacities with the film business since then, has just assumed the position of business manager of Wharton Bros. He is leaving Chicago for New York the end of this week to establish business offices in New York, where he will make his headquarters.

Former Lieut.-Gov. Barrett O'Hara of Illinois will be one of the speakers at the International Purity Congress in Louisville. His topic will be "The Influence of the Moving Picture in Combating Vice." He is expected to use as an example of this, "The Little Girl Next Door" film. It will be remembered that this picture was based on facts unearthed by O'Hara when he was chairman of the State Senate Vice Commission, and that he appeared in person in the prologue of the picture.

Messrs. Cohen & Selig have purchased the Vernon theatre, Fifty-first street and Vernon avenue, from the Vernon Theatre Company. Abe Gumbiner has purchased the Broadway theatre, 5206 Broadway from Emil Meyer.

Chas. C. Pyle, general sales agent of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, announces several recent purchases of Bartolas. Samish & Rosenfield have bought two Bartolas for their A-mus-U theatre, Clinton, Iowa, and Temple Grand theatre, Creston, Iowa. Chas. Vance, formerly a prominent Streator exhibitor, has leased the Grand theatre, Taylorville, Ill., and installed a new Bartola. Jake Schlank has leased the Princess theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, and is installing a large Bartola. Two Detroit theatres, the Dawn and the Russell, were opened February 3; they were both equipped with Bartolas.

J. Miloslowsky, owner of the Palace theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, accompanied by his wife, spent last week in Chicago attending the auto show.

Hopp Heads League Here

The Chicago local of the Exhibitors' League held its annual election in the Masonic Temple Building, Friday, Feb. 2. The meeting was called to order at 11 a. m. and was in session for seven hours. Joseph Hopp, the candidate of the progressive element among the exhibitors, was elected president, William E. Healey was chosen vice-president, and Sidney Smith and William J. Sweeney were re-elected secretary and treasurer respectively.

Robert R. Levy is chairman of the new Executive Committee, which consists of Alfred Hamburger, George Hopkinson, Max Schwartz, M. S. Johnson, John Frundt and M. S. Ludick.

Louis Frank Wants to Know

Louis H. Frank, who was elected general manager of the Seventh Annual Exposition of the M. P. E. L. A. at the convention held last summer, has been deposed. Louis Shindler has been appointed in his place. This action was taken at the Sherman Hotel on Monday, Feb. 5. Five out of the nine directors were present at the meeting. Louis Frank says that the meeting was held contrary to the constitution of the League, because ten days' notice of the meeting was not served. He wishes to know what the grounds were for his removal, and thinks that the trade ought to make an investigation.

Patriotism Among Film Manufacturers

Many of the film manufacturing companies are contributing to patriotic demonstrations. The Selig Polyscope Company is issuing a news reel twice weekly, and during the present crisis has been displaying a large flag to close the film. Accompanying the showing of Old Glory is some patriotic and appropriate quotation.

Mr. Friedberg wrote under date of Sept. 23rd, 1916:

"Get good titles. Our patrons are getting next to BLUEBIRDS. 'THE GIRL OF LOST LAKE' is a splendid production. Allow me to congratulate you on your good consistent brand."

Still unconvinced that the excellence of BLUEBIRDS and the good business they drew was due to the BLUEBIRD policy, Mr. F. wrote under date of Oct. 4:

"BLUEBIRDS will go to 100% if they get stars of national reputation. All BLUEBIRD needs is stars. The production end is there. 'SAVING THE FAMILY NAME' is splendid. Production by Smalleys brought good business."

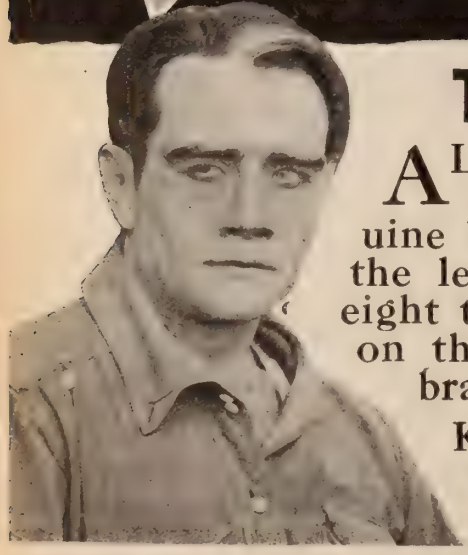
SHE'S WONDERFUL

After Selling Valuable State Rights Territory on this Unusual Production —All Negotiations Were Withdrawn —Owing to the Insistent Demands of BLUEBIRD Exchange Managers Who Will Release It as a BLUEBIRD Special Release (Not on the Regular BLUEBIRD Program)

BLUEBIRD Considers This Its Most Important Announcement

A picture so big—so unusual—that even judged by the ultra critical BLUEBIRD Exchange men according to the high BLUEBIRD standard—it was pronounced one of the greatest pictures ever produced anywhere.

In spite of the fact that after weeks of advertising valuable State Rights on this remarkable picture had been sold—THE MONEY WAS RETURNED—NEGOTIATIONS FOR FURTHER SALE WERE WITHDRAWN—and BLUEBIRD Exchange Managers prepared to release it as a BLUEBIRD Special—not on the regular BLUEBIRD Program of releases.



Now that it is a BLUEBIRD we do not hesitate to say that it is the finest BLUEBIRD ever released. "Hell Morgan's Girl" is based on a big story; time—the great San Francisco disaster; place—the famous Barbary Coast resorts of that wonderfully cosmopolitan city. Without fear of contradiction we pronounce this picture one of the three greatest box-office attractions on the market to-day.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Ince Spectacle for World Consumption

SIX months of untiring effort has resulted in "Civilization," the Thomas H. Ince spectacle before the greater part of the world.

From the day it was presented for a first showing on Broadway at the Criterion theatre, almost six months ago, and was accorded a success plans have been maturing to bring the picture before the people of every country and race.

J. Parker Read, Jr., general manager of the Harper Film Corporation is the man to whom is accredited the success of bringing about this end. As a result of his efforts "Civilization" has been booked over practically the entire world with the exception of the fighting nations. Plans for the showings in the warring countries too, are now under way.

The United States territory has been sold to no less than twelve separate and distinct corporations whose aggregate capital runs into millions of dollars.

Then the picture is making its way under another series of well capitalized organizations through all the countries of South America for which special prints titled in Spanish were prepared. Also special paper, slides, advertising matter, and heralds, were also supplied.

Australia has its own prints, so has Canada. Both of these big territories are at this writing having the picture revealed to them for the first time. Simultaneously, Africa, Spain, Portugal, Great Britain, Ireland are also having their premieres. Asia is being covered by special representatives now crossing the Pacific.

It is claimed of "Civilization" that it has the largest number of prints working simultaneously of any motion picture ever made, and that it has the largest number of companies on the road. of any production ever sent out as an amusement enterprise.

"Patria" Exploited in Albany Theatres

Big business is reported in up-state sections of New York on the Pathe serial, "Patria."

At the Proctor theatres it is being run right along with the vaudeville acts. This idea is being carried out by the Broadway theatre, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

The Broadway theatre also got out a postal card to all their patrons, announcing "two two greatest serials the world of Filmdom has ever produced." The best known and best dressed woman in America, Mrs. Vernon Castle, in the great Pathe serial, 'Patria,' and Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the Metro serial, 'The Great Secret.' These will be run on the same program for fifteen weeks in conjunction with vaudeville every Monday. Popular prices."

Insular Cities Like Westerns

That "westerns" are holding good in the Middle West is further proved by the big success of "That Girl from 'Frisco," the final chapter of which ran in Nebraska and Iowa, January 31. Exhibitors say they would gladly welcome another such "western" in a series which, while they were connected, were also sufficient individually to make a good picture.

Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)

Vitagraph Subjects Booking Big Over Country

Reports from all sections of the country last week indicated lively booking of Vitagraph subjects. "The Girl Philippa" after a week's engagement in Poli's theatre, New Haven, was booked solid over the entire Poli circuit. The Orpheum theatre, Cleveland, reports unprecedented attendance at the showing of the feature, in which Anita Stewart is starred. Since the subject became available the latter part of January, Vitagraph claims more than 1,800 bookings have been contracted for.

Sixty-six yearly contracts for Vita., Blue Ribbon releases were reported closed last week by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the company. The greater number of the contracts call for runs of from two to four days. Forty-seven of the agreements call for use of all serials.

A growing demand is felt for bookings of "The Christian" the eight-reel Vitagraph production from Hall Caine's novel, for the Lenten season. Sydney E. Abel, Chicago branch manager has made eighty-six bookings of the picture for the forty days of Lent alone.

Many additional contracts have also been received for presentations of the Thomas Dixon spectacle "The Fall of a Nation."

Linder Series Booked Months in Advance

Two months of solid bookings for one hundred and fifty Max Linder prints, the pre-release aims of Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service and Essanay's special sales department, have been accomplished. There is still an opportunity for exhibitors to obtain the film at an early date as Essanay will speedily furnish additional prints wherever required.

President George K. Spoor of Essanay announces that his plan of dividing expense on local advertising with exhibitors has resulted in the appearance of Max Linder copy in every paper of size in the country and in a majority of the smaller dailies and weeklies.

The first comedy, "Max Comes Across," has been viewed by thousands of exhibitors, and exchanges report that complete bookings for the entire set of twelve comedies rapidly followed the exhibition of the initial effort.

The comedian is now at work on his second picture, "Max Wants a Divorce."

Seattle Reaching Out for the Biggest Features

A series of bookings of the very biggest film spectacles is reported from Seattle. Long runs are being arranged for and big business is the rule at every house.

The Liberty is dickering on "Ramona," and has arranged for a trial run of the picture, to interest film censors, newspaper critics and others concerned. The film did a big business in Seattle in December, at the Coliseum.

Griffith's "Intolerance" is to have a six-days run at the Auditorium, a theatre usually open only to dramatic and musical bookings. Big advance advertising has been done and heavy business is looked for.

The Mary Pickford films at the Clemmer, booked in addition to the semi-weekly Paramount change, are a big drawing card. "The Pride of the Clan" was the offering for last week, the Paramount bills being sidetracked.

San Francisco Acclaims Ince's "Civilization"

San Francisco in line with the other big cities of the country has acclaimed "Civilization." It has taken seven months for the Ince spectacle to reach the Pacific coast metropolis.

Sol Lesser, who has the local rights, placed the spectacle at the Alcazar theatre for its premiere on February 5. Wiring the results of the showing to J. Parker Read, general manager of the Harper Film Corporation, Mr. Lesser declared hundreds were turned away at each performance, with prices at twenty-five, fifty and seventy-five cents.

Essanay's "Skinner's Dress Suit" in Big Demand

Record breaking business in the contracts booked for Essanay's "Skinner's Dress Suit" is reported by Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay offices.

Manager Rothapfel of the Rialto, New York upon seeing an advance showing of the subject immediately booked it for the week beginning February 18, substituting it for another feature.

The Piccadilly at Rochester is reported to have shelved its regular program for three days presenting the Essanay feature instead. Many other important bookings have been recorded in New York territory and from the Western K-E-S-E branches come flattering reports regarding the demand for the picture.

"Skinner's Dress Suit," written by Henry Irving Dodge, was first published in the Saturday Evening Post, then issued in book form, and is one of the best fiction sellers.

Lengthened Fox Program Draws Box-Office Results

The Fox "superpicture" policy, inaugurated with its new program of seventy features yearly, has met with gratifying response in New England, according to reports of H. F. Campbell, manager of the Fox Film Corporation in that territory. The increase from fifty-two to seventy features on the regular program allows of eighteen extra and unusual productions.

Especially, it is said, the Fox comedies are going well. The Boston Theatre, in its third week of the new Fox program, is playing at times to 4,000 people. At the Majestic "The Daughter of the Gods" is going so well, its six-week run may be lengthened.

"Shorty" Honored in His Home Town

The new series of Mutual comedies "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," are, according to contracts made, to be shown first run at Clune's Comedy theatre on Broadway, Los Angeles.

Children Enjoy Mary Miles Minter Pictures

Messrs. Lipp and Cross, managers of the Rex theatre, Battle Creek, Michigan, are using the Mutual productions featuring Mary Miles Minter two days each. They recently asked for a repeat booking on "Faith," to be used especially for their performance for the children on Saturday morning.

Other exhibitors also report finding Minter pictures ideal for children's matinee showings.

Large Omaha Booking on Vita

Manager Denham Palmer, of the Vitagraph Exchange in Omaha, says "The Girl Philippa," although not released in the Omaha territory, is being booked in the largest houses. The Majestic, Des Moines, Ia., had booked it to run a whole week the week of February 25.

"Americano" Rebooked by Clune

The most recent Douglas Fairbanks Fine Art picture, "The Americano" is proving a greater drawing card in Los Angeles than previous releases of this star, and it is very probable that Clune's Broadway theatre will return it for an additional week in the very near future. The picture would, in all probability, have been continued a second week had it not been that advertising material for the showing of the Ince picture, "The Crab," had previously been prepared. Los Angeles newspaper critics herald "The Americano" Mr. Fairbanks' best picture to date, and refer to him as one of if not the most popular male star of the screen.

Linder Comedies for Strand

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announces that the Strand Theatre, New York City, has contracted for the Essanay-Linder comedies, the first to be shown during the week beginning Feb. 25th. This comedy, "Max Comes Across," was shown to a large number of expectant exhibitors at Loew's New York Roof Theatre, Tuesday, Feb. 6th, and the announcement that the Strand had signed for the entire series was made a few hours later.

Exhibitors throughout the country are prone to accept the Strand bookings as a safe guide, and it is expected that the Essanay-Linder comedies will receive an exceptional sendoff on this account.

Vita "Peace" Picture Ends Three-Months Boston Run

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is playing its third engagement and twelfth week in Boston at the Scully Square Olympia. This is the largest theatre on the Gordon Circuit of houses and seats 2800. It is probably the first picture ever repeated in the Scully Square Olympia after having played so long in other houses.

The peculiar position the country is in and the possibility of war with the Central Powers, is said in part to explain the extraordinary booking.

Scenes from "The Easiest Way," an Adaptation of the Walter Play, with Clara Kimball Young, Soon to be Released by Selznick, Inc.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Fannie Ward in Revival of "Sally Temple"

Sally Temple, the far-famed star of Drury Lane theatre and of Pump Lane, in which she lived, is to be immortalized upon the the screen. Fannie Ward, Lasky-Paramount star, plays the title role in the adaptation of Rupert Sargent Holland's novel, which will be released under the title, "The Winning of Sally Temple."

Fannie Ward has been starring in a number of purely modern roles and was last seen in "Betty to the Rescue," in which she is surrounded with an atmosphere of orange groves and gold mines. Now she goes back to the picturesque time before the American Revolution and appears in crinoline, ruffles and white powdered wig of 1770. It is the first time that Miss Ward has turned back the pages of history since she started in the Lasky-Paramount picture "Witchcraft," which of course had colonial New England as its setting.

Among those who appear in support of Miss Ward are Jack Dean, Walter Long, Horace B. Carpenter, Billy Elmer, Paul Weigel, H. Woodward, Harry J. Smith, Eugene Pallette, Florence Smythe, John McKinnen and Vola Vale.

Ivan Changes "Promise" Title

In order to avoid confusion, the Ivan Film Corporation has changed the title of its new production from "The Promise" to "Two Men and a Woman." This story, written by Willard Mack, was produced under the direction of William Humphrey. When ready for release it was learned that the Metro Pictures Corporation had ready for release a picture under the same title, and upon request of the officials of the Metro the Ivan Film Corporation readily agreed to change its title.

Lively Bidding for Picture from London Novel

"The Silver King of the North," a five-part picturization of Jack London's well-known novel, has just been completed by George Orth for the Monitor Film Company of Grand Haven, Michigan.

Mr. Orth is at present in New York. He has received a number of offers, but is said to be as yet undecided, though a report is current that Selig has purchased the picture.

First S. & S. Story for Film Is Chosen

"Fortune Photoplays" is to be the title of the new series of four-reel features now being produced for General Film from the Street & Smith stories. This series as announced last week will be used on the pick of the thousands of stories that have appeared, and will appear in the Street & Smith group of popular fiction magazines.

Playwright Bartholomae Pathe Scenario Head

Author of Many Stage Successes Has Been with Film Company Three Months; Promises High Standard of Story Subjects

THE rapid expansion of Pathe's activities was evidenced in another direction last week by the announcement that Philip Bartholomae, one of the best known playwrights of the present day, has been quietly acting as the head of the Scenario Department for the past three months. This most important department approves, rejects or rewrites the scenarios of all the Pathe producing companies before the scripts are turned over to the director and then they pass on the director's work.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager states that this department headed by Mr. Bartholomae and composed of men and women each of whom is an expert in some particular line of production, deserves considerable credit for the marked improvement in Pathe pictures during the past few months.

Mr. Bartholomae is perhaps best known to the theatrical audiences of the country through his latest success, "Very Good Eddie," which ran for two years on Broadway, and is now playing to capacity business in other large cities, and is opening in London next month. Among his other Broadway hits were "Little Miss Brown," "When Dreams Come True" and "Over Night."

Mr. Bartholomae is now working on the scenario of a big production which will be produced under his supervision, and in which two young society girls "finds" of his will probably make their debut.

"The picture audiences of the country I am told, number over twenty-five millions and are growing daily," Mr. Bartholomae said recently. "The tendency is toward better stories, better casts and better direction, and I feel safe in predicting that in a year or so, three-quarters of the population of the country will be patrons of the picture shows.

"Today a successful picture will show to ten millions. No matter how successful a stage production is, it can only show to a small percentage of that number. The picture is the entertainment of the masses. A year from now that will be even more true that it is today. We shall soon see the greatest authors writing for the screen."

Margaret Illington Screen Bow Directed by Reicher

Frank Reicher, who has directed Lasky-Paramount productions since allying himself with the photoplay, has been chosen to preside over Margaret Illington's motion-picture debut in the Lasky adaptation of Basil King's celebrated novel and play, "The Inner Shrine," in which the star won one of her greatest stage successes.

Until her departure for the Famous Players studio in the East, Mr. Reicher has been directing Marie Doro, her transfer from Hollywood being so timed as to give Reicher ample opportunity for selecting his cast and finding his locations for the Illington production before his star arrived at the studio.

As a consequence of this arrangement, Miss Illington found everything in readiness to begin work the instant she arrived at Hollywood, and no time was lost in getting the picture under way. The sets had been designed and prepared for erection, the first interior which was required for the picture being already in place when Miss Illington appeared.

Anchor's First Coast Subject Completed

All scenes for the first subject of the Anchor Film Company made in California, "Hell Hath No Fury," were completed this week, and within the next two or three days, will be sent to the New York office. The filming of this picture has required about eight weeks, and contains some new logging camp and scenics, which add much to the unusual story which is the foundation for the production.

Grave Davidson and Joe King play the leads of this picture, Melbourne McDowell is the heavy, Robert Warwick appears in the character part, Cora Drew takes the mother role, and little Corrine Johnson plays the child part. Charles Bartlett is the director, Reeves Eason his assistant, and the story was written and produced under the supervision of James A. Stiles.

Mutual Star Productions

Works of Noted Authors Produced by Mutual

Dickens' Story and Ibsen Plays Among Classics in Which Nance O'Neil and Marjorie Rambeau Will Make Appearance

TO the literature of the screen, Mutual will shortly add the classics of such writers as Ibsen, Charles Dickens, Gertrude Atherton, Algernon Boyesen and Frederick Arnold Kummer. Some of the best works of these authors have been secured as screen vehicles for Nance O'Neil and Marjorie Rambeau in the series of pictures they are making at the Powell-Mutual studios.

"Mrs. Balfame," the first vehicle chosen for Nance O'Neil, has been completed at the studios of the Frank Powell Producing Company. The production is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Gertrude Atherton. This is the first of her stories Mrs. Atherton has permitted to go to the screen.

"Hedda Gabler," on which Miss O'Neil is now working, is a picturization of the Ibsen play. "Hedda Gabler" was one of Miss O'Neil's most famous roles on the speaking stage and a part she has played over seven hundred times. Her first appearance in "Hedda Gabler" was in Australia. She then made a trip through South Africa, and later returning to America appeared in practically every city in this country in the same famous play, and gained eulogies everywhere.

The third of Miss O'Neil's productions, "Bleak House" comes from the pen of Charles Dickens.

"The Greater Woman," chosen for Miss Rambeau's first appearance on the screen, is a picturization of Algernon Boyesen's play which was presented extensively on the stage in Europe. This production has also been completed at the Powell studios.

The second production on which Miss Rambeau is now working, "Motherhood" is a film version of the play by Frederick Arnold Kummer, author and playwright. Her third offering will be "The Debt," a European success.

"The Second Wife," an original story by Caroline I. Hibbard has been written especially for Miss Rambeau.

Another of Ibsen's plays will be given to the public in "The Doll's House," in which Miss Rambeau will portray the character of Nora. This is lighter than most of Ibsen's plays and for that reason proved more interesting to many theatregoers when shown on the stage.

Next Erbograph Release Is "The Moral Code"

Ashley Miller is directing Anna Q. Nilsson and Walter Hitchcock in "The Moral Code," an Erbograph Company feature which is to be released shortly on the Art Dramas program. Mr. Miller also wrote the story of the photoplay.

"The Moral Code" is described as a powerful screen presentment of a vital problem of everyday life in America and England, where the regulation of the marriage relation is in accordance with the laws and traditions of the past, and not the living present.

The theme of the production is similar to that of George Bernard Shaw's "Getting Married," which is attracting so much attention at the Booth theatre, in New York City, where the play is now running. The story of the photoplay is developed along totally different lines from that of the play, however, a definite conclusion is reached in the picture, while the play ends without having reached any conclusion whatever.

Florence Hamilton and Richard Barthelmess are other members of the cast.

Eventful "Break" Scenes Shown in Gaumont Weekly

The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, with its large resources, has fully covered the news of the break with Germany in its issue No. 111. Leading personages in the world drama, places of strategic importance where trouble is anticipated should war result, and scenes of preliminary precautions especially those taken in New York to guard subways and bridges are all depicted. A special section is devoted to the important conditions arising from the present situation. Other pictures in the issue include best views of all world happenings of importance.

Glendale Kalem Studio Near Completion

According to the latest reports from Lower California, Kalem's new inclosed studio at Glendale is rapidly nearing completion. It is 100 x 150 feet. The present outdoor stages have been rebuilt so as to conform to convenient working with the new indoor studio.

Besides these important structures many minor stages have been built on different parts of the grounds. Landscape artists will be employed for the beautification of the grounds.

Speaking editorially of the Kalem enterprises as an asset to the picturesque little city of Glendale, the Glendale Sun says: "The establishment of the head offices of the Kalem Company in Glendale (producing division) has a wonderful meaning when the whole situation is analyzed. It means the steady employment of hundreds of people with a weekly payroll of approximately $40,000. All home labor is being employed in the building of this model institution and local talent will be given the preference in the production of the various pictures wherever practical."

Forthcoming Release Introduces New Ivan Player

The February release of the Ivan Film Corporation, "Two Men and a Woman," brings to the Ivan banner the services of John Reinhard.

This actor gained his first stage experience in "The Wizard of Oz," and thereafter appeared under the managements of Lew Fields, the Shuberts, Klaw and Erlanger and Cohan and Harris. His first picture experience was in the stock companies, Thanhouser and Gaumont, and thereafter Mr. Reinhard appeared with success for the World Film Corporation and the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Hank Mann as a Director

Hank Mann, who has been featured in several Foxfilm comedies by Director Charles Parrott, is now directing his own company, and has almost completed his first picture. Charles Conklin has taken his place in Mr. Parrott's company.

Glimpses of the Elaborate Costume Picture, "The Eternal Sin," a Brenon- Selznick Release, in which Florence Reed Appears as Lucretia Borgia

Farrar Film Aids Anti-Censor Cause in Kansas

A mute appeal against strict censorship was given members of the Kansas Legislature a short time ago in the form of a special exhibition of Geraldine Farrar's "Joan the Woman."

The lawmakers were in session considering proposed legislation of a drastic nature against the motion picture business, when A. D. Flintom, president of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, and Carl H. Pierce, special representative of Paramount, arrived at Topeka. Mr. Pierce having a copy of "Joan the Woman" with him, suggested showing the feature to the legislators, many of whom admitted never having seen a motion picture in their lives.

Many of the legislators after the showing not only warmly commended the picture itself, but said that they had been enlightened as to the excellence of present day pictures; that picture production has far surpassed anything of which they had previously dreamed; while others even went so far as to say that they hoped eventually to see the State of Kansas liberated from film censorship.

Metro Players Migrate South

Emmy Wehlen, her director, George D. Baker, and her supporting company have gone to Metro's winter studios at Jacksonville, Fla., to make her forthcoming production, "The Duchess of Doubt," by John Clymer and Charles Logue, adapted for the screen by Mr. Baker.

Among the members of her company are George Stuart Christie, Kate Blancke, Frank Currier, Walter Horton, Peggy Sweeney, Cameraman Joseph Shelderfer, his assistant, Dwight Begeman, and "Jimmy" Sweeney, property master.

Week's Delay in Release of "The Royal Pauper"

A change in the date of the release of "The Royal Pauper," a five-reel Edison production in which Francine Larrimore, the Broadway star appears, has been made. First announced for release through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service on February 12, this picture will not be distributed until a week later, February 19.

Three New Selznick Pictures Near Completion

Herbert Brenon Is Finishing "The Eternal Sin"; Clara Kimball Young's Subject, "The Easiest Way," Almost Ready

WITH the recovery of Herbert Brenon from the illness which incapacitated him for the past five weeks, activities in the Selznick-Picture studios resumed their normal aspect last week. Mr. Brenon, whose first Selznick offering was Nazimova in "War Brides," was taken suddenly ill with typhoid fever in Wilmington, Del., and for a time was not expected to recover.

Although only out of the hospital ten days Mr. Brenon has returned to his studio on the Palisades to finish his Selznick-Picture, "The Eternal Sin" starring Florence Reed. This production was nearly completed at the time of the producer's illness so only a few days' studio work remains. As soon as the last scene is taken Mr. Brenon will go to Atlantic City, where arrangements have been made to rent a theatre to be used for cutting and assembling the film.

Meanwhile the other three Selznick-Pictures stars are rapidly completing their new productions.

Clara Kimball Young, under the direction of Albert Capellani, has only a few more days' work to do on her fourth Selznick offering, the adaptation of Eugene Walter's drama, "The Easiest Way." Her third picture under the Selznick banner, "The Price She Paid," founded on the novel of the same name by the illustrious David Graham Phillips, has been cut and assembled by its director, Charles Giblyn, and is now ready for release. Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, of Chicago, have closed with Mr. Selznick to run this feature at the Studebaker theatre in Chicago, beginning this week and simultaneously with this pre-release showing, the picture will be played in New York at a Broadway theatre.

The Norma Talmadge Company, under the direction of Julius Steger, is in the South filming the exteriors of her next Selznick production. The title of this picture is being withheld temporarily, but the story is said to be an exceptionally strong one, and it is expected that the picture will prove a worthy successor to "Panthea," which is reported playing to good business throughout the country.

Robert Warwick, whose first appearance as a Selznick-Picture star, will be made in all the Marcus Loew houses next week in the adaptation of "The Argyle Case," is progressing rapidly under the direction of Leonce Perret in the production of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Court of St. Simon."

Spokane Society Praises Mrs. Castle in "Patria"

The Davenport, Spokane's $3,000,000 hotel, and its rendezvous and social headquarters of the city's fashionable set, was the scene, January 26, of one of the most unusual events in its history, when a pre-release showing of "Patria," the International Film, featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle, was held. Three hundred were turned away who could not gain admission to either of the two exhibitions of the first five chapters presented.

It was the first time the Davenport and Spokane ever presented a picture in this way, and the reception of "Patria" tonight indicates that Spokane society folk appreciated fully the novelty and merit of the entertainment provided.

Beecroft Sells Foreign Rights of Big Films

World rights to two Edison productions, "Pardners" and "Where Love Is," have been bought by Chester Beecroft, according to announcement last week from his office, 71 West Twenty-third street.

The Mutual Film Corporation is said to have immediately taken the American rights, and in addition Mr. Beecroft stated that rights to both pictures in the United Kingdom and India had also been sold.

The Chaplin-Mutual rights for the series of twelve two-reel pictures have been disposed of for Japan for a fancy price, which includes a cash payment of $10,000, according to further announcement of Mr. Beecroft.

Phil Lang Discusses the "Story First" Policy

Scenario Editor Says Public Demands Stories That Do Not Depend on Star Personalities to Get Them Over Properly

"One hears a great deal of talk and reads considerable publicity matter about the value of the story in motion pictures of today," says Phil Lang, for five years Kalem's scenario editor. "I know of no one manufacturer," he continued, "handling the proposition any more systematically than the Kalem Company.

"We concluded some time ago that the word 'feature' is a misnomer; that length does not denote quality. In fact, the reverse is more frequently the case. Some manufacturers apparently believe that the 'star' will constitute the attraction and that the picture will take care of itself. Perhaps they do not admit this, even to themselves, but the multitude of so-called features bears out this statement. With all respect to the capable stars in artistic features, there is a predominating number of the 'half-baked' variety.

"The moving picture is an amusement proposition. Although it has little in common with the stage from an artistic standpoint—having developed an art of its own—it is interesting to note the analogy in the evolution of both. A casual walk up Broadway at 8 P. M. will show what plays are doing business. You will find that the 'Closing Saturday Night' notice is in front of several theatres where the names of well known stars blaze forth. It is apparent that the public has not been drawn by the star. At another theatre crowds are being turned away, all anxious to see the 'hit,' and none concerned about the featured star. Indeed, as you look over the cast in the 'hit,' it is unlikely that you will find any particular player featured. In short, theatrical managers have learned that no play except a good play is profitable.

"Sooner or later picture-makers will wake up to this same situation in their own field—if they expect to continue in business.

"Kalem found that a high standard could be accomplished and preserved in the short lengths. To bear out this belief we so systematized our work that we produce in one and two thousand feet a bigger and better story than will be found in the average five part feature.

"True, our stories necessarily are condensed, but the stories are all there, with perfect continuity. Personally I believe the average reader enjoys De Maupassant, with his graphic brevity, more than the verbose author who, after all, has little to say. I do not mean to infer that we have any De Maupassants in our scenario department, but we certainly have striven to take a leaf from his book.

"We plan our series just as a properly conducted magazine lays out its policies—and goes to the best for its material. For instance, we concluded last spring that the public was ready to receive a Western series—not the old claptrap 'race-for-the-sheriff'—but the West of today. We looked over the field and engaged Robert Welles Ritchie for this work. Mr. Ritchie's fiction in leading magazines denoted that he knew the new West and wrote virile action. We went into the matter thoroughly with him. We had many conferences. We ran pictures for him. We acquainted him with the country in which the stories would be made. We did not call upon him to write scenarios, but moving picture plots. He grasped the essentials at once and our scenario department has had no difficulty whatever in making the technical developments.

"Later we decided that a high class, melodramatic series in one part episodes, with novel, gripping stories and sensational exploits of the male lead would be popular. The first essential was the story, which we felt, should be true to life and contain an element of mystery; each story to be complete in itself, but each presenting the same central character. You will note that we made these conclusions before concerning ourselves with the story. In fact we thought the matter over for a year before finally shaping it. Then we discussed it with Mr. Ritchie. He suggested the character of a police reporter on a metropolitan daily. As he had a wealth of material from his own experiences to draw upon, we engaged him to write the plots. This series has made history.

Mollie King in "The Double Cross"
(Pathe Serial)

"'The Girl from Frisco' series, too, has made history. There are many reasons for its success; principally the quality of the stories. We did not begin work on this series until Mr. Ritchie had written the entire fifteen episodes. Thus we were able to judge it as a whole.

"The popularity of the series recommended that we continue it for ten more episodes. Mr. Ritchie agreed to write them. The series continued to grow in popular favor. Then the question of producing a new series of the same type arose. Mr. Ritchie was now writing 'Grant, Police Reporter' and pressing fiction contracts made it impossible for him to supply additional plots that would be a credit to Kalem and to himself. Consequently we looked over the field to secure a new writer. None appeared so well suited for the work as Frederick R. Bechdolt, author of thrilling western fiction in the Saturday Evening Post, McClure's, Collier's, Popular and other magazines. Mr. Bechdolt met me by appointment in San Francisco on my recent trip to Kalem's coast studios at Glendale. I explained just what we required and have secured from him 'The American Girl' stories.

"We later on induced E. W. Hornung, whose home is in England, to write further adventures of 'Stingaree' expressly for us. He has done so. And I am confident that the celebrated author of 'Raffles' and 'Stingaree' is the first author of his calibre to write directly for the screen.

"Our railroad series, 'The Hazards of Helen,' celebrated its second anniversary in November, breaking all series or serial records. Scenarios are supplied by a number of contributing authors, and they are essentially lechnical. The basis of each is a daring railroad exploit of the girl telegrapher, and the author must be acquainted with railroading.

"And so throughout all of our series pictures, we have always placed the story above the star. It pays."

Erbograph Engages W. Hitchcock as Lead

Walter Hitchcock, who has done such creditable work on the screen since he deserted the legitimate stage a short time ago, has been engaged by the Erbograph Company to play the leading parts in that company's productions. Mr. Hitchcock will share stellar honors with Anna Q. Nilsson in his first picture for his new association. The production will be called "The Moral Code," and was both written and directed by Ashley Miller. It will be released on the Art Drama's program.

On the legitimate stage Mr. Hitchcock has appeared with such players as Henry Miller, Nat Goodwin, Margaret Anglin, William H. Crane, Otis Skinner, and Kyrle Bellew.

In pictures he had appeared in a number of the more important "special" features that have been released in the past six months, and was featured in the support of the most prominent screen actresses. Some of his more important screen plays have been "Destiny," and "The House of Tears," with Emily Stevens; "The Celebrated Scandal," with Betty Nansen; "Vera, the Medium," with Kitty Gordon, and "The White Raven," with Ethel Barrymore.

Arkansas Law-Makers Will Hear Rose Tapley

Following her address before the Texas Legislature at Austin on February 1, Rose Tapley the Vitagraph star, who is on a lecture tour of the country speaking at theatres on vital questions concerning the picture industry, was invited to address the Arkansas Legislature on February 14 on the subject of motion picture censorship. Miss Tapley has accepted the opportunity.

Before the Texas law-making body Miss Tapley spoke on Sunday Closing. In Arkansas where a drastic state censorship bill is up in the Legislature, motion picture interests are anxiously looking forward to the effect of the actress' coming address.

It is the first time in the history of Texas or Arkansas that a woman has addressed the Legislature of either state on any motion picture subject.

"Two Men and a Woman" is the Title of the Next Ivan Release in Which Will Appear Guy Coombs and James Morrison

Latest Ivan Release "Two Men and a Woman"

The forthcoming release of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., will boast an unusual cast of players, gleaned from various other leading concerns. The title of the next picture will be "Two Men and a Woman," and it was produced by William Humphrey at the Ivan studio with James Morrison, Christine Mayo, Guy Coombs, Ruybe De Remer and Helen Arnold in the conspicuous roles.

Mr. Morrison was recently seen in "Enlighten Thy Daughter," which is now running at the Park theatre, and is a permanent player with the Ivan concern.

Ruybe De Remer was also a principal in "Enlighten Thy Daughter," and has a more prominent role in "Two Men and a Woman" than in her former Ivan vehicle.

Christine Mayo, a leading heavy woman, will have another vampire type character to delineate, and Guy Coombs will play opposite Miss Mayo.

Two Selig Pictures on Week's General Program

"The Great Treasure," is the title of the latest Selig multiple reel feature to be released in General Film Service. Otis B. Thayer directed the drama which was written by Wm. Anthony McGuire. The subject is a drama of the underworld.

"A Brother's Sacrifice," released the same week by the Selig Company in General Film Service is a story of railroad life. There is unusual love interest intertwined in the story. Included in the cast are Edith Johnson, Lillian Hayward, Charles Wheelock and Lafayette McKee.

Artcraft Issues Attractive Lobby Display

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation has just issued to its exhibitors and exchanges unusually attractive photograph frames for lobby display. A large space is left open for the exhibitor at the top of the frame in which can be inserted the name of the theatre and other matter of local interest. Three styles of frames have been prepared accommodating eight 8 x 10, six 8 x 10 and two 22 x 28 photos. They have been gotten up in a most artistic manner and are of the double folding variety.

Artcraft Announces Plans for Fairbanks

Comedian Forms His Own Company—John Emerson Will Direct—
—Anita Loos to Handle Scenarios—Work Starts Immediately

As was announced exclusively in Motion Picture News last week, Douglas Fairbanks has been signed by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation at a salary said to exceed that ever paid a motion picture star.

Mr. Fairbanks is to immediately form his own producing company, and will produce all the photoplays in which he will appear. Work on the initial production will be commenced in the East, other subjects being staged in whatever locale best suits the story.

"I have been investigating the motion picture business with the serious intention of making my own productions for some time past," said Mr. Fairbanks shortly after the agreements were signed. "As a result of these inquiries I have determined to operate under my own name so far as the production of the plays is concerned, and stamp them with my own individuality.

"My decision to make my own pictures gives me the chance to build my own producing organization. John Emerson, who has directed several of my most successful pictures, will have entire charge of productions, and scenarios will be written by Anita Loos, who is responsible for most of the best stories I have had in the past. Although our first pictures will be made in and near New York, it is our intention to make our productions in whatever locale best suits the story."

The releasing of the Douglas Fairbanks productions through Artcraft has created wide interest, not only in film circles, but among motion picture patrons throughout the country. Many other important motion picture companies made bids for Fairbanks' services.

Every exhibitor, regardless of the size of his patronage, will be given a fair opportunity to show these pictures.

"This is an age of specialization," said Mr. Greene, in discussing the arrangements between Mr. Fairbanks and himself, "and the motion picture industry has followed the lead of other industries in this respect. Artcraft Pictures was formed for the purpose of distributing and exploiting productions such as those in which Mr. Fairbanks will appear. He has given me to understand that he is as enthusiastic over the opportunities to do pictures under his own management according to the arrangements with us as we are. The new association also makes it possible for all exhibitors, despite whatever their regular programs might be, to present the new series of Fairbanks pictures."

Hint at Graft Expose in Los Angeles-Made Film

An eight-reel photoplay based upon the important incidents in the life of Charles E. Sebastian, former mayor of Los Angeles who resigned a few months ago, is being filmed by an unnamed company which has rented producing space at the Christie Film Company studio in Hollywood.

Sebastian has served in many positions in the Los Angeles police department, first as patrolman in the out districts, and later advanced to the office of chief. From there he became mayor, following a very sensational campaign, and remained in office until his enemies are said to have induced him to resign.

The former mayor will play himself in this picture, which is being directed by Dr. H. G. Stafford, former scenario editor at Universal City. The supporting principals besides a number of well-known Los Angeles men are Jack Connelly, Seymore Zelliff and Virginia Nelson. The story for the play, it is intimated, is of the nature of an expose of graft connected with several of the past administrations of Los Angeles.

New Island Possession to Be Fox Background

Virginia Pearson and a supporting Fox company are to be pioneer screen voyagers to St. Thomas Island, largest of the one-time Danish West Indies, Uncle Sam's most recent island acquisition.

The players will leave for the island, which is about 1,300 miles from the tip of Florida, within a week. The fact that a tropical setting is required for the story and that Florida, the usual haven of producers, has been rather well "shot up," led to the choice of St. Thomas Island.

Vita Feature Ready; Exhibitors to Title It

Sequel to "Battle Cry of Peace" for Premiere in Month—
Five Hundred Exhibitors Canvassed to Choose Best Name

VITAGRAPH'S sequel to "The Battle Cry of Peace," which has had the working title of "The Battle Cry of War" is now ready for release. It may have a Broadway premiere within the next month, although definite plans have not as yet been announced.

There is no certainty that the feature will be released under its working title, however, for Vitagraph officials have felt a better name could be selected. To this end, and following a conference between Commodore Blackton, Albert E. Smith and Walter W. Irwin of the producing company, decision of a more suitable title has been put up to the exhibitors of the country. In this way it is felt better results for the theatres may be obtained, and help to better relations between both.

Five hundred exhibitors were telegraphed last week, and asked their opinion as to the right name of the production. Within a few days almost three hundred replies were wired back and fifty letters received. Almost without exception, Vitagraph reports, the theatres through their owners or managers, said that "Womanhood, or the Glory of the Nation" was the best title that could be bestowed on the picture. The replies indicated a belief that the joining of what had been thought and suggested as two independent titles, is the best that could be chosen.

Commodore Blackton is in receipt of several requests for the use of this new production as a recruiting stimulus all over the land. For that reason, it is anticipated that a very early release date will be set for New York City, where the picture will have its first public showing.

It is said that Major-General Leonard Wood, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, E. Stanwood Menken, and a host of others who have done so much for preparedness and defense have seen the picture in private and that, born of their opinion of it as a patriotic stimulus, came the requests for its government use.

The cast of the picture is an all-star one, including as it does Alice Joyce, Naomi Childers, Mary Maurice, Harry Morey, Joseph Kilgour, Walter McGrail, James Morrison and a score of other well-known Vitagraph players.

"What's in a Name?"—"Everything," Says Brady

If Doubtful Meaning Is Drawn Through Difficult Title Pronunciation, Public Is Not Attracted, He Declares

SURPRISE occasioned by the change in title of "The Hungry Heart" in which Alice Brady stars, from the original name under which the play was known on the stage—"Frou Frou"—has been answered by William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, with a number of interesting and practical remarks on the subject of play titles in general.

"I put titles on pictures to sell them," said Mr. Brady. "If you select a name that not everybody understands and all cannot pronounce, you are placing your picture under just that much of a handicap. When 'Frou Frou' was played as a drama upon the speaking stage numbers of persons called it 'Frow Frow,' and I do not suppose very many knew the significance of the name.

"But it is a sure thing that everybody of ordinary intelligence will get a suggestion from 'The Hungry Heart,' which carries a direct meaning in plain, homely words.

"It is a dangerous thing to tag a picture, or a spoken play, with a name in a foreign tongue or one that is not universally familiar. I recall that the late Augustin Daly produced a drama which he called 'Pique,' and what the public did with that title was almost beyond belief.

"There was another play named 'Mlle. Fifi' that immediately degenerated into 'Millie Fye-fye,' and never came back. In my own production of 'Divorcons' I noticed that an amazing number of individuals pronounced it 'Divorkons,' and, of course, had no notion at all of what the title meant.

"When I switch the titles of World Picture plays, as I quite frequently do, the idea is to provide something that will enter every mind and stick there.

"Just imagine what would happen to almost any article of commerce, however, valuable, issued with a title that a perceptible percentage of the population could not pronounce, and that carried no definite idea of its utility. Times have changed since Shakespeare inquired 'What's in a name?'"

American Standard Annexes Producing Companies

The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, a distributing company, having its home offices in Chicago, and exchange branches in 28 cities, announces the affiliation of two more producing concerns.

The Redlands Beauty Films, whose managing director is Julius Frankenberg, will release a series of twenty-six one-reel comedies, to be known as "The Adventures of Pietro." The company has just secured Miss Vivian Rich for a two-year period. Miss Rich is well known through her excellent work in American and Fox productions, her latest appearance having been with William Farnum in "The Price of Silence." She will first appear in a series of single-reel pictures made by the Redlands Company, but within the course of a few weeks will be starred in features adapted from recent novels.

Another producing company that will release its product through the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation is the Sunshine Film Corporation. This company has leased the American Bioscope Company's studio. Twenty-four one-reel comedies will be produced at the rate of two a month. The printing and developing will be done by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago. Joseph Strauss is the president of the Sunshine Film Corporation, K. M. Scoville the general manager, and Wm. Buckley, Jr., the producing director.

M. G. Watkins, general manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, states that several other important affiliations and contracts will be announced in the near future.

Houston Is Location of Master Company Studio

At a cost of $21,000 the Master Motion Picture Company has purchased 3.88 acres of land, with a frontage of 780 feet on Houston avenue, Houston, Texas, almost directly across the street from the old Highland Park grounds. Within the next few days buildings, which will cost approximately $10,000, will be started.

It is here that motion pictures to bear the "Master Picture" brand will be made. H. J. Binney, for 11 years identified with pictures, as both actor and director, for a long time with the Keystone people, is at the head of the new enterprise, a $45,000 corporation.

Balmy South for Theda Bara

Requirement of exterior locations requiring Southern atmosphere in the new Fox production, featuring Theda Bara, has necessitated the star and her company going to Florida. Palm Beach will be the location where most of the filming will be done. Upon completion of the picture Miss Bara and the company will proceed to Miami where another feature will be started.

In the supporting cast who left for the South, were Walter Law, Glenn White, Clifford P. Saum, Marie Curtis, Alice Gale, Grace Saum, Harry Hilliard, Callie Torres, Director J. Gordon Edwards, and Photographer Philip E. Rosen.

and scores tremendous success.

NO greater compliment could be paid to ANY Feature Photoplays than that paid to BLUEBIRDS by S. L. Rothapfel, the greatest showman since the days of Barnum, who chose "The Mysterious Mrs. M" and "Polly Redhead" for the Rialto Theatre right in the face of the fact that more than a dozen competitive features containing stars of supposed drawing power were all offered in the same week.

It proves that Mr. Rothapfel believes with us that after all "The Play's the Thing" and that the Star in a poor play is cheating the public and cannot endure. He endorses our policy of "The Perfect Play plus the Perfect Cast" plus perfect direction and perfection of details.

THAT'S THE TRUE MEANING OF "BLUEBIRD." Mr. Rothapfel's selection of BLUEBIRDS for the RIALTO, New York's finest Picture theatre, should carry tremendous weight with every Exhibitor in this country. Mr. Rothapfel's favorite pastime is "SUCCESS." He has achieved success solely thru his knowledge of what the people want.

YOU can follow the ideals of Mr. Rothapfel and succeed in your territory as does Mr. Rothapfel in his territory. BLUEBIRDS HAVE ARRIVED. BLUEBIRDS ARE HERE TO STAY AND TO SUPPLANT THE MEDIOCRE IN FEATURE PHOTOPLAYS. Marian Swayne, Jean Sothern, Dorothy Bernard and Anna Nilsson, Stars Seen on the Art Dramas Program

Davis Directing Jean Sothern in Art Drama

Will S. Davis, the former Fox director, who was engaged by the Van Dyke Film Production Corporation for the production of that company's pictures, is at work on his first picture at the Van Dyke studios. Jean Sothern is playing the lead in the production which is being made under the working title of "The Cloud."

In support of Miss Sothern appears a cast including Arthur Housman, and the following: Ogden Crane, Mae Melvin, Franklin Hanna, Richard Tucker, Walter Miller, and others.

Billy West Comedies Now Handled by Belmont

The Belmont Film Company has leased, for a term of years, the Mittenthal Studios, at Yonkers, New York, where the Billy West Series of comedies will be continued to be produced. The comedies featuring this new comedian have already proved popular, among them being "His Married Life," "Boarders and Bombs," etc. The newest release, which is now in the process of making under the direction of Fritz Wintermeier, bears the title of "A Hotel Mix-up." The release of this picture is announced for February 26.

To Stage Jungle Comedies in Hawaii

Scenes for future E. & R. Jungle Film Company productions are to be made during February in Honolulu. Cameraman, animal trainers, and one or two players, accompanied by Mrs. John Rounan as manager, sailed for the island February 5, with the intention of spending about two months away from their Los Angeles studio. While on the island the animals will participate in vaudeville bills at the leading theatres, and be featured in the animal carnivals held the latter part of February. A number of prints from each of the E. & R. comedies were taken to the island, and will be booked through the motion picture theatres there.

Mary Miles Minter Heads Feb. 19 Mutual Program

Another "Shorty Hamilton" Story, Several Dramas and Comedies, and Weekly and Topicals Also on Program

MUTUAL announces the sixth of the Mary Miles Minter features for release on February 19. This will be in five reels and is entitled "The Gentle Intruder." The piece is said to afford her a wide opportunity in a difficult role.

"The Gentle Intruder" was produced under the direction of James Kirkwood. George Fisher, Eugenie Forde, Harvey Clark, Marie Van Tassell, Franklin Ritchie and George Periolat are in the supporting cast.

In this picture Mary Miles Minter—as Sylvia—is the companion of an elderly woman in the home of the lawyer who has defrauded the girl of her fortune. Miss Minter is seen in this picture at her best. Her youthful charm is given a free opportunity of expression.

On February 19, also, will be released the sixth of the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" series, "Shorty Promotes His Love Affair."

In "Misjudged," the ninth of the Mutual-Niagara series, "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," Helen Greene, Earl Metcalfe, Edith Sinclair and Arthur W. Matthews play the principal parts.

The American company contributes two short dramas, "Calamity Ann's New Job," featuring Louise Lester, released February 23, and "Mouth Organ Jack," in which J. Warren Kerrigan is starred, ready February 24.

From the Horsley Studios comes a Cub comedy, "Jerry's Brilliant Scheme," scheduled for February 22. George Ovey, of course, plays the role of Jerry, and is assisted by George George, M. McCarty, Arthur Munns, Claire Alexander and Helen Gilmore.

Vogue offers "The Butcher's Nightmare," on February 25, in which Ben Turpin poses as the proprietor of a futuristic butcher shop. This film contains many hilariously funny situations.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," No. 16, reaches the screen February 20. It provides scenes at Old Heidelberg, Germany; Scottish Highlands, showing pictures of the northeastern part of the highlands in County Cromarty; Monaco, the World's Smallest Principality, showing scenes at Monte Carlo, the great gambling center, and the neighboring watering places at Mentone, France.

On February 21 comes the Mutual Weekly with all the latest news of the day. On this date also is released "See America First," No. 76, showing scenes around Vicksburg, Mississippi and the National Military Cemetery. On the same reel is one of the Gaumont Kartoon Komics, "Polly's Day at Home."

Reel Life No. 43, scheduled for February 25, shows four topics, "Dainty Perfumes," "Teaching Children to Swim," "Logging in Louisiana" and "Making Bottles at Home."

Plan Tour De Luxe for Arbuckle

Plans for the itinerary across the entire continent are being made by M. L. Lewis, manager of the Los Angeles Progressive Paramount Exchange, in connection with the departure of Roscoe Arbuckle from Los Angeles about the middle of February, and his tour to New York where he is to produce Paramount comedies. Mr. Lewis has adopted the slogan: "Worth His Weight in Laughs" for the numerous receptions planned for the heavyweight comedian. Arbuckle and players will be accorded a farewell dinner in Los Angeles, attended by exhibitors, news and trade paper writers, and others of the industry. As no compartment in a local pullman could be found that was large enough, an order has been sent forward for a special car for Mr. Arbuckle on his trip. The itinerary has been completed, and provides for short stops in a number of the leading cities.

"The War," Timely Series, General Film Release

Deadly Battlefield Realism and Preparedness Lesson from British Mobilization Scenes Claimed for Government Films

WITH America facing a great crisis, General Film has made a timely release of its series of official government pictures of the European conflict, "The War."

This spectacle is said to bring home to the spectator as no other medium could, the methods and results of preparedness. The pictures were taken by official British Government photographers under the direction of the War Office. In logical sequence they show England's stormy struggle to equip herself for conflict, and the result in her successful offensive on the Somme.

They are said to sum up each branch of England's fighting forces, her drill camps at home, her great army "Somewhere in France," her sea fleet keeping its stormy vigil in the North Sea, and the actual fighting in the battle of the Somme, which is covered thoroughly in the different releases.

The General Film Company claims exclusive rights to all of the Official War Films that have been taken. These rights cover all the Official War Pictures that will be taken during the period of the war and for one year after peace is declared. The series now ready for the exhibitor will be followed by the official pictures of the various Allied Governments.

"The War" is released by the General Film Company for Official Government Pictures, Inc., of which W. K. Vanderbilt is president, and H. P. Davison, treasurer. All of the gross profits from the showing of these pictures in America will be devoted to deserving war relief funds.

One of the first important showings of "The War" was at the War Relief Benefit of the Philadelphia North American, at the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia. "The War" series created a furore at this showing and was cheered by a capacity audience. A substantial sum was realized at this benefit for various war relief funds.

Keystone—Cops, Fair Ladies and All—Steadily on the Go

DOINGS at Mack Sennett's laugh-producing plant at Los Angeles have been many and varied the past week. Mr. Sennett himself seeing his organizations all provided with sufficient work has hied himself with a few friends upon a short vacation in search of game on the Mexican border. Ten of his directors are engaged in producing more dare-devil, farce comedies. Four are cutting and arranging these films.

Charles Murray, has gone to New York for a stay of two weeks among old friends. As Murray has gained new laurels during his celluloid career, and gained for himself the champion after dinner spooch maker of the film colony, the original Broadway way expects to hear a number of thrilling tales of camera cavorting.

Keystoners were terror stricken this week when an unearthly scream penetrated every section of the mammoth plant. The forty foot pool was the gathering place of all to see who had passed out, but there they found Wayland Trask under the direction of Frank Griffin was submerged in the icy waters, the first touch of which had affected his vocal organs.

On another day it was almost impossible for any of the producing units to leave a certain set where Fred Fishback with Mack Swain, his Ambrose, was working. The attraction was a score of hula hula dancers, and work was not continued any place until the set was inclosed and thus the wigglers of grass skirts were hid from view.

So well did Teddy the big dog learn to carry a baby and milk bottle into scenes during the making of the "Nick of Time Baby," under direction of Clarence G. Badger, that he insists upon doing it every time he sees the director. Last week, according to the publicity department, Teddy could not find a baby at the studio, he went out into the highways and byways and borrowed one. The police are after Teddy now for kidnapping.

Strong Cast Supports Mae Marsh in First Picture

Goldwyn Pictures has assembled a cast of screen players of exceptional capacity to support Mae Marsh in the first picture she is making for her new employers.

Miss Marsh and her sister, Marguerite Marsh, are also sisters in their picture roles. George Cooper is playing the part of their screen brother. Vernone Steele is Miss Marsh's new leading man. The other players thus far engaged for the picture and already at work in Fort Lee under Director Ince are:

John Wessell, Neil Moran, Maude Cooling, Ned Hayes and Ed. Lynch.

Clubwomen Honor Mae Marsh

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn star, who is now hard at work in her first motion picture for her new producing firm, will be the honor guest of the Theatre Assembly at their monthly luncheon at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Friday afternoon, February 23.

Mrs. J. Christopher Marks, president of this organization of 4,000 members and for years a friend and admirer of Miss Marsh, has long been anxious to introduce the Goldwyn Pictures star to this audience of representative New York women.

Marguerite Marsh and Director Ralph W. Ince will be Miss Marsh's guests at the Assembly luncheon.

Special "U" Weekly Out Day After German Break

A "patriotic number" of Universal Animated Weekly was compiled immediately upon receipt of the despatches telling of the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany last week, and within one day was being shown at the leading Broadway theatres.

Recent pictures of President Wilson, Secretaries Lansing, Daniels and Baker, and Ambassadors Gerard, von Bernstorff and von Tarnow, are shown, as well as all the branches of the army and navy. A stirring cartoon concludes the reel.

A heavy demand for this issue has made necessary a pronounced increase in the standard output of prints, all exchanges reporting great enthusiasm by exhibitors.

Work Resumed on Last Three of Horsley Series

After several weeks' respite from work, spent in vacationing, while David Horsley was shaping his policy for future production, Crane Wilbur will this week renew his activities at the David Horsley studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Horsley has arranged for the appearance of his star in six five-reel feature productions which he will release through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Three of these six features have been completed, namely, "The Painted Lie," "The Single Code," and "Love Everlasting," and stories for two of the other three releases have been selected.

"The Eye of Envy," is the title of the subject on which Mr. Wilbur begins his work. The picture is to be made from a story written by the star. It is based on the theme of envy and is treated in semi-allegorical fashion.

Work on in New Powell Long Island Studio

With the filming of the first scenes in "Motherhood" Marjorie Rambeau's second Mutual Picture, the new studio at College Point, L. I., which will in future house the activities of the Frank Powell Producing Corporations, was formally opened last week.

The site is known as "Donnolly's Grove and Pavilions," and is under long term lease with the option of purchase. The studio is one of the largest and best equipped in the vicinity of New York. The main building has a working floor space of 16,000 square feet. This is surrounded by smaller buildings, in which are the printing and developing plants, projection room, carpenter shops and the like. Every facility and aid that experience, efficiency and ingenuity can devise, has been installed to aid in the production of the highest class subjects.

There are now in process of production under Mr. Powell's direction two series of feature pictures. Marjorie Rambeau will make her screen debut as a Powell-Mutual star in one of these, while Nance O'Neil is the star of the other.

Press Praises Pathe Subject, "Kick In"

"Kick In," Pathe's Gold Rooster Play, featuring William Courtenay and Mollie King, is pronounced "the best movie of several months" by the photoplay editor of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

In a review of this production, which is adapted from the Broadway success by Willard Mack and directed by George Fitzmaurice of the Astra Film Corporation, the Ledger says:

"No one in the field today can handle melodrama with such expertness, style and speed as Pathe. Conciseness, sensation, action—Mr. Fitzmaurice knows how to blend them admirably. In this case he has worked with a good vehicle and the outcome is an hour of swift, exciting story telling, capital in congenuity, often beautiful in photography and lighting, and sympathetically acted by well trained players.

Novel Publicity Campaign Boosts "The Valentine Girl"

ONE of the biggest publicity campaigns ever given a five-reel program picture has been launched in advance of the Famous Players-Paramount production, "The Valentine Girl," in which Marguerite Clark is to star.

Crane Wilbur Will Soon be Seen in David Horsley-Mutual Big Feature Productions

By arrangement with six great newspapers in the East and Middle West, there was issued on February 11 a total of 1,500,000 art supplements to these papers showing an attractive reproduction of Miss Clark as the Valentine Girl, the issue being particularly timely because of the coming of St. Valentine's Day on the 14th of the month.

In order to permit exhibitors to benefit to the largest possible extent from this innovation, slides have been made reproducing the art supplement itself and adding information that Miss Clark will be in such-and-such a theatre in the Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Valentine Girl," at such-and-such a time. Three hundred of these slides have been taken for circulation by the Boston Paramount exchange, and fifty slides have been taken by each of the other Paramount exchanges. These will be distributed to the exhibitors.

It is expected every Paramount exhibitor will profit by this art circular advertisement, not only during the showing of "The Valentine Girl," but from other Marguerite Clark pictures. The supplement is claimed to be so striking that it is thought the pictures will remain in the households to which they are circulated long after the photoplay has been released, and thus be a standing advertisement for Famous Players-Paramount pictures, especially those with the popular little star.

The following newspapers have issued this art supplement: New York World, Philadelphia Inquirer, Chicago Herald, Boston Herald, Washington Herald and Fitchburg News.

Mack Sennett Declares Family Only Should Judge Films

MACK SENNETT, head of the Mack Sennett-Keystone Company, while perhaps one of the least to be affected by censorship, is nevertheless utterly opposed to it, and when asked for his ideas on the subject, had this to say:

"As a practical arm of the government, any sensible person instantly perceives that censorship is impossible. You can't cut wickedness and suggestiveness out of a picture because neither is an absolute term.

"A suggestive scene is one that suggests evil to the spectator. What happens to suggest evil to you, may not to me. What stirs evil in me may leave you unscathed.

"Wickedness is also a relative term. There are occasions when the female form unclothed, is quite bereft of evil; others, where a stocking hanging on the line has evil potentialities.

"It is utterly impossible to lay down any rules that would bring about the results desired by the censors.

"Wicked ideas in motion pictures, as in all kinds of literature, depend entirely upon the context. The wickedness lies in what goes before and what comes after. Any single portion of a film, taken alone, would probably be found innocent enough, even in the worst pictures.

"In my opinion a great evil is sure to come from this censorship. Little boys pass through an age where they snicker at every other word as being a 'bad break.' You can't help it.

"The greatest argument, however, against organized censorship, is that it is unnecessary. If you let the public alone, tough picture will be taken care of."

"Tarzan" to Be Booked as Road Show

William Parsons, organizer and general manager of the National Film Corporation has been in Los Angeles for the past several weeks making arrangements for the production of a multiple reel subject adapted from the Edgar Rice Burroughs story of South African jungles, "Tarzan of the Apes." The screen version has been adapted from the story of William E. Wing, who had the aid of the author who has been in Los Angeles for the past several months. General Manager Parsons plans to film the greater part of the production in Los Angeles, and will take the African negro village scenes at a Tampa, Florida studio. Mr. Parsons has returned to New York for a stay of a few days, and upon his return active production work will be commenced. The subject is to be released as a theatrical production and each company will have its own orchestra and producing organization. Production will be under way soon.

Geraldine Farrar, Enemy to Censorship

An Account of the Opera Singer's Efforts in Making "Joan the Woman" Her Screen Masterpiece

AT a time when the motion picture industry is concerned with the various fights on censorship, internal discord aroused by personal feelings and a general effort to retain the public support for films in the face of a series of so-called sociological dramas, there is something positively refreshing in the mention of the name of Geraldine Farrar.

This really great American artist whose every appearance on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House brings forth greater audiences than the capacity of that massive auditorium will hold, actually has contributed something progressive and uplifting to the entire motion picture art.

Miss Farrar is far from being a stranger to picture exhibitors and audiences. Her debut on the films more than a year ago was for the time being the most talked of event in the circles of motion pictures. Her photoplay version of "Carmen" through the means of which she actually made record for all time of one of the greatest characterizations in operatic and histrionic history was seen by the millions who frequent pictures and by hundreds of thousands others who were attracted to cinema houses by her name for the first time.

Her "Carmen" was followed by two other photoplays, "Temptation" and "Maria Rosa."

Having already achieved the pinnacle of achievement in grand opera, it was testimony to the remarkable versatility and artistry of Miss Farrar that she was able to act before the camera with success as great, if not greater, than some of the most popular film stars whose entire professional work from its beginning has been bounded by the studio.

When Cecil B. De Mille, who directed her earlier pictures, discussed last spring with Miss Farrar her activities for the summer, she said, characteristically, that she would like to do, if possible, something bigger than had ever been done before, something more trying on her abilities. After a résumé of several projects, it was decided that the time was ripe for a massive production based on the life story of Joan of Arc. Miss Farrar was enthusiastic over the idea. It appealed to her imagination, just as the figure of Joan of Arc since the day when the Maid of Orleans broke forever the shackles which held France fast, always had appealed to artists, writers and players.

"Joan the Woman," in which Miss Farrar as Joan of Arc, has achieved her finest characterization, is the result of that interview, and some five months of earnest labor last summer under the hot California sun in and around the Lasky studios at Hollywood. Ask any of the thousands who habit the motion picture colony in California for the name of the artist who is more universally beloved, whose annual visits in their midst is more cheerfully anticipated, who is the hardest worker and best-tempered star that comes out of the East, and the answer will be invariably—Geraldine Farrar.

The difference between Geraldine Farrar and many other stars of the operatic and theatrical stages who enter motion pictures for a time, is that Miss Farrar takes her medium seriously. She believes in motion pictures. She believes in it as an art as capable of fine and delicate expressions as the painted canvas or the theatre or the printed page. She believes no one is above it in stature. Her faith in motion pictures is, perhaps, the greatest of a number of reasons why she has been so successful before the camera.

Acting in the studio, Miss Farrar says, is as if the artist were appearing before hundreds of millions. She never loses sight of the truth that behind the lens of the camera is an audience worldwide. The narrow film that responds to the photographer's turn furnishes a record for all time. It is not as if 4,000 persons heard her sing a performance of "Carmen." It is as if she were acting before an audience of millions, and she says with this thought constantly in mind she feels within her a reaction as strong and virile as if the million actually were before her.

There has been a good deal of fiction, and some truth told about motion picture stars and their environment. Miss Farrar relates a single instance, however, as different as can be from the usual.

The day before her departure from the Lasky studios after five months' daily appearances as Joan of Arc, Mr. De Mille announced that her contribution to Joan was finished. The scenes in which she appeared had been completed. There still remained much work to be done by others, but Miss Farrar was through. The prima donna looked down upon the suit of silver armor which she wore. She glanced at the mailed gauntlets and fingered the great sword in its scabbard. Tears came into her eyes.

"If it is done," said she, "I hope it is well done. I am sorry we are finished."

Great audiences twice daily in the Forty-fourth Street theatre, New York, and the Majestic theatre, Los Angeles, testify at this time to the public's approval of Miss Farrar's "Joan of Arc." It has been variously claimed to be the finest cinema ever produced. Whether or no, it stands as a monument to a remarkable woman, who withheld from her characterization not one whit of artistry of which she is capable.

A photographic reproduction in colors appears of Miss Farrar in this issue.

Sunday Show for Charity O.K.

The first victory for Sunday motion picture exhibitions in Harrisburg, Penn., was won on February 4 when the Victoria announced, and gave a performance for the benefit of the Jewish War Fund Relief.

The Ministerial Association of the city protested, but found they were unable legally to halt the show because no admittance was charged, contributions to the war fund being voluntary and optional with the attendants.

Record Press Sheet for "Gods"

The Fox Film Corporation has just printed a sheet devoted to press comments on "A Daughter of the Gods," featuring Annette Kellermann. It measures sixty inches in width by forty inches in depth, and contains a portion of the newspaper notices in the three cities where the picture was first shown—New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

The press comment from Washington, including the accounts of President Wilson's wedding anniversary theatre party on December 18, came in just as the sheet was going to press. It is included in a novel manner, being played up as in an evening newspaper under glaring headlines and in a boxed-in "fudge."

Newspaper editors in particular will appreciate the mechanical difficulties involved in making up and printing one newspaper page containing twenty-four columns, each forty inches, the equivalent of two columns in length. In other words, the sheet is equal to an eight-page, six-column newspaper, all printed on one side of a single sheet. Some idea of the amount of type contained may be gathered from the fact that the galleys, if placed end to end, would measure 960 inches, or 80 feet; or the type slugs placed end to end would measure 96 feet.

La Salle Plans Studio Extension

The La Salle Film Company which has been producing comedies at the Christie studio in Hollywood, has taken a three year lease on a three acre property at Hoover street and Santa Monica boulevard, Hollywood, and plans for studio stages and other buildings necessary, have been made by General Manager M. De La Parelle.

In the past three weeks, Director De La Parelle and company have completed three subjects, which have been titled "The Widow's Might," "Man Proposes?" and "Where is My Auto." The principals of these are Jean Otto and Zasu Pitts, with Eddie Boland appearing as comedian, and John Allard an important member of the supporting cast.

IN THE STATE RIGHTS FIELD

Rex Beach Featured in Tropical Film

Dr. Salisbury's Latin American Pictures Reveal Famous Author in Ancient Pirate Haunts—Fifteen Reels to Be Sold on State Rights Plan

DR. EDWARD A. SALISBURY, who recently returned from a moving picture taking expedition through the pirate haunts of Central and South America in company with Rex Beach, has announced that he will dispose of the 15,000 feet of film secured on the state rights plan.

The pictures have been divided into three five-reel features, entitled "Rex Beach in the Pirate Haunts"; "Rex Beach on the Spanish Main," and "Rex Beach in the Footsteps of Capt. Kidd."

Mr. Beach, a number of whose stories have already appeared on the screen, is the star of the pictures. He is shown in action on the wild portions of the historic Spanish Main of Central and South America. Any one who has read stories from the pen of Mr. Beach, knows that such a setting is ideal for the red-blooded action the author delights in. His adventures with alligators, crocodiles and lions and his landing of mighty tarpon in the Chagres River in Panama as shown in the pictures, are filled with excitement.

The members of the expedition made the trip in the gasoline cruiser "Wisdom," and over 12,000 miles were traveled. This sets a record for trip by motorboat. Many severe storms were encountered on the Atlantic Coast; several of these being portrayed in the picture.

The pictures are remarkable records of that mysterious portion of the Western Hemisphere, and are in beautiful photography.

The expedition visited the islands occupied by the San Blas Indians. This race of diminutive people had never been photographed prior to the landing of Dr. Salisbury and Rex Beach. Another feature is the eclipse of the sun, the first ever secured with moving picture camera. This was taken from the crater of the highest volcano in Costa Rica.

Four of the great Central and South American industries are shown in detail. These are the coffee, sugar, cocoa and banana industries.

The party stopped on the way to Panama, and spent a week shooting wild duck along the coast of the Carolinas. Several hundred feet of film were secured. The bird and animal life of Central and South America are portrayed, and throughout the pictures there is a trend of human interest. Experts who have witnessed the showing of these pictures, declare that they are in better condition than any reels heretofore brought back to the United States from the tropics. Due to the humidity, it is difficult to secure satisfactory results with the moving picture camera in those latitudes.

Unusual publicity will be given the Rex Beach productions. The author is writing a series of articles, now appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, in which the adventures of the expedition are recounted. Mary Roberts Rinehart, another author in the party, will relate her adventures in a forthcoming issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

The pictures will be distributed by the Grand Feature Film Company, H. C. Reinke, manager, and offices have been opened at 220 West 42d street, Room 1606, Candler building, New York. Already a number of inquiries have been received relative to available territory.

Reid-Robards Picture Company Formed in California

Hal Reid, the well-known playwright, scenario writer and motion picture director, with Willis Robards, also a writer and producer, have combined with a corps of Santa Cruz and San Francisco capitalists, to produce state rights features.

The new organization will occupy a studio at Santa Cruz, and negotiations are pending for the studios at San Mateo as well.

The first release will be "Clara Steinlow-Governor," depicting the first woman governor in the United States. The picture argues the question if a woman elected to office will "do her duty like a man" or fail because of woman and wifehood.

This will be followed by "The Ten Commandments," by Rev. C. H. Parkhurst and Mr. Reid.

The policy of the new company will be to deal directly with the state rights buyers.

Miss Marcella Russell will be featured with Mr. Robards, who will assume all leading roles.

Next Frohman Release to Be Howard's "God's Man"

Announcement is made by William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, that the next offering will be a nine-part picturization of "God's Man."

"God's Man" was written by George Bronson Howard. The author has narrated the trials of a college youth, the quagmires, the dark abyss, the degradation and despair arising through the tremor of New York's gay life until the ultimate coming of the dawn of righteousness.

George Irving who directed "The Witching Hour," produced "God's Man."

President Sherrill in speaking of the newer production said: "We are definitely convinced that with the production of 'God's Man,' our corporation shall become even more firmly established than before.

The definite method of distribution of "God's Man" has not been decided upon as yet, although several most flattering offers have been made by prominent buyers for the outright purchase of the negative.

More than likely, however, the Frohman Corporation will decide to market "God's Man" upon the state rights plan.

Backer, of Mammoth, Uses War Scare to Good Advantage

F. E. Backer, president of The Mammoth Film Corporation, was in Washington last week in the visitors' gallery when the President made his speech to Congress breaking off relations with Germany. Mr. Backer rushed to the phone and, getting his home office, directed them to get busy with "The Fall of a Nation," which the Mammoth owns in New Jersey.

Letters went out that night to every exhibitor in Jersey, telling them of the opportunity which they had at hand of using the front pages and editorials of every newspaper to boost their theatre if they booked "The Fall of a Nation."

Moss Will Produce Adaptations of Novels

THE B. S. Moss Producing Company has announced its intention to produce film adaptations of well-known novels during the current year.

The plan, which was prompted by the success of "Three Weeks," "The Salamander," "One Day" and other Moss productions, involves a series of eight monthly releases, starting off with "One Hour," of which Paul McAllister, is the scenario writer and director.

"One Hour," which will be released March 15, is a sequel to Elinor Glyn's "One Day," which was preceded by her "Three Weeks."

"One Hour," is now undergoing completion with a company headed by Zena Keefe and Alan Hale, at Saranac Lake. The final scenes will be taken at Jacksonville, Fla., the feature running into six reels. "One Hour," is under the direction of Paul McAllister.

After "One Hour," will come a seven reeler, adapted from Cosmo Hamilton's great book, "Sins of the Children." Cosmo Hamilton will be remembered as the writer of "The Blindness of Virtue." The B. S. Moss Producing Company has completed negotations with two stars.

In conjunction with the series, the B. S. Moss Producing Company has inaugurated a service department for buyers and exhibitors. With the selling of a feature to the state rights buyers or exhibitor, the service bureau will be at the disposal of the buyer and exhibitor at all times.

Herbert Warren to Produce for Open Market

"The Transgressors" Will Be First of a Series of Features by Pioneer in Film Field—Organized at $50,000—Capital from Middle Westerners

EDWARD WARREN, a pioneer producer of motion pictures, recently returned to New York from the Middle West, with $50,000 backing for a motion picture enterprise of his own. The $50,000 was handed to him to to do with as he deems best. In motion pictures and theatrical circles, this trust is regarded as more than remarkable, and redounds creditably to Mr. Warren's sagacity.

Edward Warren was one of the first directors in America to produce multiple reel attractions for the state-rights market. Four years ago he organized a company of his own to produce big plays, to be known as the Edward Warren productions. Mr. Warren has perfected the producing and business organizations in the last month, and his machinery is now in practical operation. His first production, "The Transgressor," by Laurence Marston, with Charlotte Ives, Sheldon Lewis and Walter Hampden, will soon be well under way at the Herbert Brenon Studios.

George Fitch, formerly technical director for Brenon, has been engaged in the same capacity with Mr. Warren. Harry Hadfield, formerly with Shubert, will be assistant director, and Henry Cronyager, who took "The Deemster," has been engaged as the cameraman. H. Z. Levine, recently of Triangle, will be Mr. Warren's business manager.

"The Black Stork" Attracts National Comment

Sherriot Feature in Which Noted Chicago Surgeon, Dr. Harry Haiseldon, Takes Part Has Revived "Defective Baby" Discussion

"THE BLACK STORK," the feature which is being handled on the state rights plan by the Sherriot Pictures Corporation of Chicago, has already attracted wide comment in all parts of the country because of the fact that Dr. Harry Haiseldon, the noted Chicago practitioner, takes a leading part in it.

Dr. Haiseldon, it will be recalled, is the defender of the theory that defective babies should be mercifully killed at birth. Comment on this issue, owing to the renewed prominence given "The Black Stork" by the newspapers, is causing inquiries to flood the Sherriot offices, which clearly shows the keen interest aroused.

That the entire country is interested in the subject is manifested by the telegrams and letters which Dr. Haiseldon has received from every quarter of the country.

Aaron Brylawski, the widely known motion picture theatre man of Washington, D. C., writes:

"Your decision is appreciated by every one who has had experience in defective cases. I don't believe you will find one among those who have criticized you that would undertake the burden of raising such a child."

J. J. Johnson of Hyde Manor, Sudbury, Vt., writes: "The country at large owes you lasting gratitude for your position. Your position and picture may educate the half baked portion of our population."

Frank H. Briggs, writing from Hotel Puritan, Boston, Mass., says: "You are absolutely correct in your position. Suppression at the source is the real thing. I congratulate you."

Grace Safford Farington, 66 Longwood avenue, Brookline, Mass., a young society woman who devotes a large part of her income to assisting the inmates of insane asylums writes: "You are doing a splendid work. You have dealt a terrific blow to the old superstition that mere existence is life. I have visited insane asylums to have the unfortunate inmates cling to me and cry 'set me free.' You have sent the word that shall echo through the ages. God speed you for your effort."

W. B. Merritt, vice-president of the West Bay Naval Stores and Lumber Company, St. Andrew, Fla., writes: "You are right. There are so many real wrongs that should be righted. I am sorry more people do not follow your course and spend their energy where it is needed."

S. E. Conybeare, associate editor of the New England Homestead, Springfield, Mass., writes: "You are doing a splendid work. I am the father of a year old boy. Had he been a defective, I would not have wanted him to live. I commend you, sir, on your courage to do the humane thing and to spread your convictions."

Professor Irving Fisher of the Department of Political Economy of Yale University says: "I am greatly interested in eugenics, and on your stand on the defective baby question. I believe the custom you started will do good."

"The Black Stork" is not a sex picture. It contains nothing objectionable, yet the presence of the Chicago surgeon is certain to result in remarkable interest on the part of the public.

"A Mormon Maid" Is Ready for State Rights Release

Originally taken in eight reels, with Utah, Colorado, and other Mormon territories for its locale, "A Mormon Maid," has been cut to five reels, and will be released on the state rights plan.

The Friedman Enterprise Corporation of Minneapolis produced the feature, and Hiller and Wilk have been retained as selling agents.

"A Mormon Maid" features Mae Murray, while Hobart Bosworth has a supporting part almost equally important. Other well-known players are in the cast.

The feature is interesting at this time because of the recent activities of the Anti-Mormon League, an organization with several hundred branches in the United States.

Helen Murphy, president of the New York branch of the league, held a meeting at the Hotel McAlpin last Sunday evening, and made an offer to purchase "A Mormon Maid" for propaganda purposes in the Southern territory.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" Is Ready for Buyers

Henry J. Brock, head of the Enlightenment Photoplays Corporation, which concern is handling the distribution of Ivan film, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," announced to the trade this week that the feature is now ready for distribution, and that offers were being considered for territorial rights.

Mr. Brock, during the run of the picture at the Park theatre, has refused bookings on the feature from various booking concerns.

First-class theatres in all the principal cities throughout the country have been offered, but Mr. Brock was firm in his desire to let the purchasers of territory use their own judgment as to the exploitation of the picture in their respective states, and is now considering many proffers.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" has been at the Park theatre for three weeks now and during that time, has shown a remarkable increase in patronage.

New Philadelphia Exchange

The Peerless Feature Film Exchange, Inc., the latest states-rights concern in Philadelphia is now definitely established in its quarters at 1339 Vine street. Earle W. Sweigert, formerly manager of the International Film office, is in charge of the new exchange.

The territory handled by the Peerless includes Eastern, Pa., Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

The special productions already acquired by the Peerless are "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour" and "People versus John Doe." Besides these big features the scenic and educational films of the Educational Films Corporation and Christie comedies, at the rate of one per week, will be released through the Peerless in this region.

The "Conquest of Canaan" is already being well booked in this section.

"The Witching Hour" will have its premier at the Stanley theatre where it is placed for a week's run.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Kansas City Exchange Notes

The Standard Film Corporation, which distributes the new Art Dramas in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, has selected Kansas City as its base of operations. G. H. Howe, a well-known film executive in this section of the country, is general manager. Phil L. Ryan, former sales promotion manager for Universal, is manager of sales and advertising for the company. Temporary quarters have been taken in the Gloyd building.

As a result of increasing new business, the United Film Service Company has been compelled to enlarge its quarters at Kansas City. Formerly the company occupied room 309 in the Gloyd building and, beginning last week, located in rooms 311 to 316 Gloyd building.

J. Erwin Dodson left this city Monday to take charge of the organization of the St. Louis office of the Standard Film Corporation, which distributes Art Dramas. He recently resigned management of the Missouri territory for Universal.

More Commodious Quarters for Fox Branch

The entire second floor of the Decatur building at 121 Fourth avenue, has been secured by the Pittsburgh branch Fox Feature Film Corporation, and as a result this company will not change its home for a period of five years at least.

The company was anxious to secure larger headquarters in this city as their business had increased to such proportions that more room was absolutely necessary, and the result was that the owners of the building seeing a chance to rent other space to smaller companies rented the entire second floor to the Fox interests and transferred the lease of others to other parts of the building.

Doings in Denver Exchanges

Edward Armstrong, formerly manager of the Universal Film Exchange of Salt Lake City, has been appointed district manager of the intermountain territory, with headquarters at the Universal Film Exchange Company, of Denver, Colo.

The offices of the intermountain territory, of which Mr. Armstrong has charge, comprises Butte, Mont.; Salt Lake City, Utah, and Denver, Colo.

The new Selznick Exchange in Denver has been opened by B. N. Cohen, who arrived in the city last week. A large advertising campaign is now being planned.

The Bluebird branch in Denver is now in charge of F. Y. Langtree.

Canada "U" Man Resigns

Charlie Stevens has handed in his resignation as Eastern Representative of the Canadian Universal Film Company in Ontario and has gone to New York City on a project of his own.

Many Promotions in Vitagraph Branch Exchanges

New Detroit Exchange Also Opened; George Balsdon, Jr., Assistant New York Manager, Is Made St. Louis Manager; Other Changes

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, has appointed George Balsdon, Jr., who has been assistant manager of the New York exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, as manager of the St. Louis branch of that company, vice A. N. Webster.

Mr. Balsdon's promotion was due solely to his excellent work in New York on "The Secret Kingdom," "The Girl Philippa," and other Blue Ribbon releases. Mr. Balsdon was the first employe of the New York exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E when it was organized.

The newly created Detroit branch of Vitagraph V-L-S-E located at 40 East Larned street, under management of J. M. Duncan, opened on February 1 as a full fledged exchange instead of, as in the past, operating as a sub-branch of the Cleveland branch.

William M. Elliott has been appointed city salesman and assistant manager under Mr. Duncan. George M. Rowell and Alexander Y. Glennie are road salesmen for the branch.

J. M. Tally, for some time road salesman in Montana for Vitagraph V-L-S-E, has been appointed branch manager, in charge of the Salt Lake City exchange, succeeding F. A. Wagner.

S. M. Bowers, formerly a Vitagraph exhibitor at Pocatello, Idaho, has been appointed city salesman in the Salt Lake City exchange. He succeeds J. Deitch, who was forced to resign because of ill health. Mr. Bowers is devoting himself almost exclusively to booking "The Secret Kingdom"; his first five days netted him eighteen new accounts.

Earl H. Arnold, formerly salesman for the Triangle Company, has been appointed salesman in the Syracuse branch of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, to cover northeastern New York state.

H. L. Andress is a new salesman in the Minneapolis exchange, succeeding C. L. McVey, who recently came to New York to enter business for himself.

Ben Braasch, formerly booker in the Omaha office, has been made a salesman in that branch, covering Omaha city theatres. This makes the sales force of the Omaha office total four men.

Exhibitors to Benefit by Pearson's Ad Campaign

E. R. PEARSON has been appointed manager of advertising and sales for the Essanay-Max Linder comedies and is preparing an elaborate sales campaign, having appointed Essanay representatives for all parts of the United States and Canada, who will work in close harmony with the K-E-S-E sales force. Promises of a co-operative advertising campaign, whereby the Essanay Company's National Advertising Campaign appropriation will be placed at the disposal of exhibitors booking the Max Linder comedies for use in their own home town newspapers in connection with their own advertising at the time of playing these features, are also made. These stunts are really the forerunners of an extensive campaign.

Mr. Pearson believes that little of the past national advertising on film, has directly benefited the exhibitors. He holds that the manufacturers' advertising money spent in an appeal to the public to go and see a worthy specific feature at a specified theatre on a given date, will result in an immediate and wonderful increase in attendance and ultimately resolve itself into a great advertising campaign.

Mr. Pearson has for years been in daily contact with the exhibitor and his problems, having been branch manager about five years in Omaha for the General Film Company, Pathe and World, respectively, prior to opening and managing the V-L-S-E, Inc., branches at St. Louis, Denver and Kansas City.

Many Shifts Among Cincinnati Exchangemen

F. B. Chase has been appointed Cincinnati representative for McClure productions. Mr. Chase formerly was affiliated with V. L. S. E. and later with the International, working out of the Cincinnati office of each concern and is acquainted with this territory.

Gus G. Kinzeler, formerly manager of the Elite Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, has been appointed special representative out of the Triangle Distributing Corporation's Cincinnati office.

Joseph Partridge, Eastern Division Manager of the McClure Series Department, made a flying visit to Cincinnati last week and, while his stay was short, he started a campaign on the McClure productions—"The Seven Deadly Sins."

News of Philadelphia Exchanges

The Philadelphia Selznick Pictures' Exchange is now comfortably settled in its new building at 1335 Vine street, where it occupies three floors in place of the one at its old quarters.

H. A. Bugie, Philadelphia manager of K-E-S-E has returned from Chicago, where he attended the "Keys" convention. Mr. Bugie found the conference a mine of new ideas which will be dug out for the benefit of the exchanges.

"Moving Day" on Los Angeles Film Row

Four Exchanges Shift Quarters in Busy Week—Los Angeles Exchanges Likely to Lose Mexican Business—Other News Notes

THIS was moving day for four Los Angeles exchanges, and by these changes all but two of the film renting establishments of Los Angeles were brought to South Olive street, which has become known as film row. All changes were due to the completion of a new film exchange building at 818-822 South Olive street. One room of this is occupied by the California Universal exchange, another by the Metro, and a third by the recently opened branch of the Consolidated Feature Film Company, which has its main exchange in San Francisco. The room formerly occupied by the Metro at 738 South Olive has become the new home of the General, which left their quarters on the fourth floor of a building at 832 South Broadway. The only exchanges not on the row now are the Progressive-Paramount, three blocks distant, and the independent exchange, Peerless Film Company, located at Eighth and Broadway.

The film building on South Olive street was constructed to meet the requirements of the exchanges, and contains every needed convenience. The Universal exchange will add a projection room and accessory department. Manager Dave Burshon planned the room for the exchange, and handsome furnishings make it one of the most attractive on the coast.

Fourteen or fifteen houses in the State of Sonora, Mexico, immediately across the border from California, will after February 15 be forced to cancel their orders for film from Los Angeles exchanges because of an order from the Governor of Sonora which provides that only films containing Spanish titles and subtitles be shown. The business is not sufficient, exchange men say, to warrant the extra expense of having special titles made unless a marked increase in the rental price is made. Negotiations are now on with the exhibitors in this territory, and it is probable some arrangement will be made to supply the theatres.

There is now but one town in the State of Arizona which has a motion picture theatre in operation four or more days a week that does not use Fox subjects. Field Carmichael, manager of the Los Angeles Fox exchange, has just returned from a trip of ten days in this territory, where he went to call on exhibitors, and particularly to see owners of theatres in five towns, all of the others in the state being supplied prior to this time. Mr. Carmichael was successful in selling service to exhibitors in every town except Williams, which has a total population of about 700.

A. B. Lamb, salesman for the Metro Los Angeles exchange, is covering the Arizona territory, and his daily reports show excellent booking for the serial "The Great Secret."

Van Husan Uses Ingenuity in Placing "Snow White"

The state rights picture handled by F. A. Van Husan of Omaha, Neb., "Snow White," is not only spreading the idea of children's matinees throughout the state, but it is starting a new practice in getting influences aside from the exhibitor to boost for the picture. The plan in boosting "Snow White" is this: Phil Monsky, road man, goes to a town, places his picture, the prices and the plan before the exhibitor; the exhibitor agrees to book the picture on any date within a certain time that it can be sent him; Monsky then goes to the principal of the schools, tells him or her how beneficial the picture is to children, and gets him or her to agree to advertise it in the schools for a children's matinee; he goes to the president of the Woman's Club and gets her to promote the picture as a part of the club's campaign for better pictures for children; he then arranges to have advertising matter sent to the exhibitor, the principal and the president of the club; later the date of release for that particular theatre is sent and the boosting begins.

This plan is being followed throughout Iowa. "Other pictures appealing to the church people, or to charitable organizations, or to any other organization could be promoted in the same manner," said Monsky. "Some day there will be produced certain pictures for certain classes, and these will be boosted among those classes not only by the exhibitor, but by others—and the exhibitor will reap the profit."

"Beware of Strangers" Opens in Chicago

"Beware of Strangers," the latest of the Selig feature films, opened at the LaSalle theatre, Chicago, on Saturday, February 10, the Central Film Company having purchased the rights in the States of Indiana and Illinois.

"Beware of Strangers" features a cast including Tom Santschi, Fritzi Brunette, Edward Coxen, Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson, Eugenie Besserer, Bessie Eyton and others. The production is an expose of the methods pursued by high class crooks in swindling the public.

Drum Severs World Connection

W. W. Drum for three years with the World Film Corporation, the greater part of that time in the capacity of Western and West Central Division manager is leaving that corporation on February 28.

Sales Record to Shoot At Paramount's Atlanta exchange, through the efforts of Manager Y. W. Freeman, Sales Manager C. Chivers and John R. Simpson within the last forty days closed sixty-six new contracts for Paramount.

Serial Handled by H. Reddish

Harry Reddish, who has been connected with the film business of Baltimore for a number of years, has been appointed special manager for "The Great Secret" serial for that territory.

J. L. Day Now Fox Manager in Atlanta

John L. Day, Jr., has been appointed manager of the Atlanta branch for the Fox Film Corporation, to succeed O. P. Hall, resigned. Previous to his appointment in the Atlanta Branch, Mr. Day managed the Buenos Aires C. A. office. After the appointment Mr. Day took a trip to the larger cities of Georgia and Florida to meet the exhibitors, to discuss future bookings, and to place the new Fox Comedies.

H. T. Tucker, manager Atlanta Branch for the General Film Service, left for Chicago to attend a conference at which all Branch managers of the above Corporation will be present to discuss the new policy of the corporation.

Mr. Tucker made a recent visit to New Orleans and reported that business was splendid among the exhibitors.

Bidding Active for "The Whip"

At the offices of the Paragon Films, Inc., in the Longacre building, many wires have been received from state rights buyers concerning "The Whip."

Mr. Tourneur has followed the policy of starring no one particular player and has decided that the bulk of attention should be given to the picture itself. Yet there has been no attempt to slight the cast which includes such well-known stars as Irving Cummings, Paul MacAllister, June Elvidge, Warren Cook, Alma Hanlon and others.

Contrary to the usual custom, the Paragon Films, Inc., have decided upon an extensive publicity campaign that will continue long after all rights have been sold, as they feel that their interest in the picture should not stop with the sale of the territory.

"Witching Hour" Sold in Record Breaking Time

What appears to be a record in matter of time consumed in the disposition of territorial rights on a motion picture has been made by the Frohman Amusement Corporation in the sale of "The Witching Hour."

Within six weeks to a day, the entire territory of the United States has been contracted for, with the single exception of the Northwestern territory of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

Unity Branch Opened in Denver

The Unity Sales Corporation has opened a new exchange in Denver, Colo., on what is commonly known as the "Movie Exchange Row," and which is located on Welton street, between 14th and 18th streets.

Harry E. Feldstein, formerly of the Vitagraph V. L. S. E. has been placed in charge.

Mutual Manager Transferred

W. H. Rippard, formerly manager of the Wilkes-Barre branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed assistant manager of the Philadelphia office. Mr. Rippard is succeeded by Bert King as manager of the Wilkes-Barre Mutual exchange.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

IF you happened to be on the line which the crow flies between Churchill's and Selma on the evening of February 8, you no doubt felt thrilled, excited, pleased, entertained, amused and what not when Violet Mersereau's latest scenario hit you. There was a gentleman down in Selma in a hypnotic state, to be precise we mean the State of Alabama, which may or may not be affected in that way. However, at an appointed hour the gentleman became hypnotic as stated, and projected a scenario from Selma to Violet, which was transcribed in all due time and sent to Harry Millarde, Violet's director. When last heard from, Harry was getting better.

ALL that, however, has nothing to do with the fact that there was a Universal dinner at Churchill's on the evening of February 8. Violet was the guest of honor and Hurry Home Van Loan was the genial master of ceremonies. Supplementing the usual good time, which was shared by all, were some excellent humorous incidents that put picture comedy in the shade. Among them was the sight of Eustace Hale Ball making a speech, and the attempt of Nat Rothstein to keep order.

BOTH a furore and an epoch were created in the trade last week when S. L. Rothapfel announced that "the photoplay today is in its infancy."

AN Exclusive Interview with a Great Man, Mr. DeKay Ed. Brayne:

"On what shall the interview be, Mr. DeKay Ed. Brayne?" we asked with some trepidation, for he was a great actor.

"Oh! About anything at all. I like picture work."

"Which do you like better, New York or Los Angeles, DeKay Ed. Brayne?"

"I like either of them better than the both of which I'm in," replied the great man, with a fine show of neutrality.

"Do you ever intend going back on the stage, Ed. Brayne?" was the next original question from the interviewer. "Or do you intend to limit your future activities to the screen?"

"Me go back to the stage! No, indeed! Not for all the money that I've been offered. I have discovered that on the stage you have to go through the same thing every night, with a matinee on Wednesdays and Saturdays. I don't think anyone ever made that discovery before. But on the screen, you know, you only have to do each scene a few times. You needn't quote me on this, though."

"Of course the life is easier, Mr. Brayne."

"Easier? No, not at all. But healthier. I love the great outdoors. Boy, shut that door, there's a slight draft."

"What do you consider the main faults of the business, Brayne?" interrupted the reviewer, endeavoring to get another original point.

"Why, lack of good stories, I believe. No one seems to have realized this but myself. It seems to be a matter of overproduction, although I can't just figure it out. I think the day of the two-dollar picture is here—no more cheap pictures.

"The motion picture director is really ignorant. At times I find myself forced to take severe measures with mine. Civility is not in his makeup, but I have hopes for him. To disregard him altogether is best at times——"

(Voice of director) "Hey there, Brayne, how long do you suppose this bunch of extras is to wait? Skip hurriedly, Ed., old dear, skip hurriedly."

"Er—pardon me for a few hours, will you, please?"

"Sure, s'long, Ed.," this from the interviewer.

DAVID HORSLEY has acquired a new leading woman in the person of—of—well, she isn't named yet, or wasn't, rather, at the time of the mad dash to press. And at about that time, Miss Horsley weighed eight pounds, but, of course, things are all different now. Congratulations, David, is our sentiment.

"THE moral tone of the world is becoming better. Where there has been hypocrisy, there is freedom of speech and thought. People are becoming more familiar with one another; their wants, their aims, and their ambitions. Narrow prejudice is being swept away, and in its place there has been established a bond of fellowship that instills in one the thought that this world is becoming a better one to live in, better than any time in the history of mankind."

EDDIE O'DONNELL, in charge of the sales on the big Arrow picture, "The Deemster," arranged a luncheon of the trade paper men last week at the Astor in order to introduce Wilbur Bates, the press representatve of the company. President Schallenberger of Arrow was present, while others at the table were Jim Hoff, Jim Milligan, A. H. Shirk, Lesley Mason and Charlie Condon.

LLOYD BROWN, supervisor of Clune productions, and Henry W. Savage are arguing, according to the Clune press department, about subtitles. Each party claims to have been the first to institute the subtitle containing as its background the motion picture itself. It seems peculiar that neither of the parties can recollect Lubin's series of "Road o' Strife" pictures, which were released something over two years ago and which had such subtitles.

Music is often apt to put a bad picture over. Good music has done it innumerable times. A body of soldiers marching away to war with only the click of the projecting machine as accompaniment will hardly succeed in sending a patriotic thrill through even the most emotional, but when the orchestra or the organ or the ten-in-one starts up "Yankee Doodle," "Dixie" or a national anthem there is usually considerable hand clapping. But as this column has evolved itself into a place of protest during the last few weeks, we want to go on record as kicking again. Why all these terrible noises when an aeroplane or a motor-boat goes cutting through the ozone or the H_2O? They are not realistic very often and about the only thing they accomplish is to drown out the orchestra and make the patron feel as if he were seated in a mammoth dentist's chair. Realism is all well and good, but let the imagination get in its work once in a while.

Legislature Considers Equal Rights for Negroes in All Amusement Places; Blow to Business, Protest Theatre Men

INTRODUCTION of a bill in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives has revived the fight for equal rights for negroes with white people in motion picture theatres and other places of amusement and public accommodation. Clauses in the bill prohibit managers, owners or employes of such places to publish or circulate letters or other forms of communication "intended to discriminate against any religious sect, creed, class, denomination or nationality" in the matter of furnishing them with accommodations. Penalty for violation is prescribed of payment to the aggrieved party a sum not less than $100 or more than $500, for each offense, and an additional fine of from one hundred to five hundred dollars, or imprisonment from thirty to ninety days, or both. Theatre managers are aroused.

The bill, fathered by Representative Theodore Morgan, resurrects a serious problem which had been thought disposed of for good when in 1915 Governor Brumbaugh vetoed a similar measure—ostensibly because of a typographical error in its final drafting.

The only other act on the statute books of Pennsylvania—a measure passed in 1887—is capable of varied construction. As a result theatre men have been left practically free to deal with the problem as they desired, and as a usual rule have segregated negroes in certain sections of their houses.

The measure at this time, it is claimed, presents an unusually serious menace to the theatre business. Thousands of Southern negroes have been brought to work in the steel and munition plants and on the railroads. Theatre owners declare they represent a disorderly element of the colored race. In counties near the Mason-Dixon line where sentiment among the whites against the negroes is very strong, managers are confronted with a vital problem and feel the patronage of their houses will suffer immeasurably if colored spectators are permitted to sit in the same sections of the theatres as the whites.

Pathe Gets All Rolin's "Luke" Comedies for Long Term

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has just signed a long term contract with Hal Roach, president of the Rolin Film Company, whereby all the Rolin product will be released through Pathe. This effectually silences rumors to the effect that the Rolin comedies would be found on another program before long and may be regarded as confirmation of the high regard in which the Pathe Company holds these pictures.

Owing to the repeated requests from exhibitors for these "Luke" comedies, in two-reel lengths, Mr. Berst decided some months ago to discontinue the release of the one reelers and put the comedies in two reels only. Arrangements were made with the Rolin Company to this end and Pathe has now on hand seven two-reel "Lonesome Luke" comedies. The first to be released will be "Luke's Lively Life," which has been put on program for March 18.

"I saw the whole seven in one morning recently," says Mr. Berst. "Fourteen reels of comedies at one sitting is a pretty severe test. I found myself laughing just as heartily at the last one as I did at the first. I am very much pleased with them. I am absolutely confident that they are a big addition to our program and will prove a great attraction to any exhibitor. We have set a price on them of $25 for first runs in large communities, and furthermore we are advertising the price."

Glowing reports from exhibitors all over the country received by various Pathe exchanges have gone far to definitely establish the value of the comedies and lead Pathe officials to close the present contract.

Kansas City Screen Club to Give Ball

A motion picture ball, with stars of large producers present, and awards of prizes of trips to studios for try-out given to young women, will be given in Convention Hall, Kansas City, in the first part of March. Plans for the ball were decided upon at a meeting at the Hotel Baltimore, February 2, of officers and directors of the Kansas City Screen Club.

The club is now appointing its various committees to handle details of the arrangements. One of the details that will be the easiest to work out, apparently, will be that of securing the screen stars. Many producers have promised to send stars.

Convention Hall will accommodate several thousand dancers on its arena floor, and some 6,000 spectators can find seats in the balconies.

Lyric, Pittsburgh, to Reopen

After the disastrous fire which practically destroyed a full block in Pittsburgh's business section, and which put the Grand Opera House and the Lyric theatre, two of Pittsburgh's best downtown motion picture theatres, the latter is to resume beginning with next Monday.

Nebraska Reel Fellows Elect Officers

The Nebraska Reel Fellows Club has been organized to include all members of the Omaha Screen Club, the Nebraska Exhibitors' League and the Nebraska F.I.L.M. Club. Plans are already under way for a big ball, "Movie Week" in Omaha, and a State convention. Exhibitors throughout the State are being notified of the organization.

At a permanent organization meeting last week, C. W. Taylor was elected president; H. M. Thomas, of the Strand, vice-president; Robert D. Shirley, of the Muse, secretary; J. E. Kirk, treasurer; and Exhibitors S. H. Goldberg, H. B. Watts and J. W. Rachman, directors. The club will meet every Wednesday. Out-of-the-State men in the city will be welcomed at all the meetings and will enjoy the rights as members. Other meetings, similar to those held in Omaha, will be held throughout the State.

Vancouver Operators Undergo Severe Test

THE examination of Vancouver operators which was commenced January 2 in the Court House is now completed and results will be announced shortly. The test was rigid and a small number of the operators gained a percentage high enough to warrant their being granted certificates. The men who failed to pass will be granted provisional licenses, under which they will be allowed to work until the next examination takes place three months hence. Should they again fail, they will be permitted to work as assistant operators only.

Middle West Exhibitors Are Prospering

E. J. Lowrey, Intermountain representative for the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has just returned to his office in Denver, after a six weeks' trip through the territory and reports that the film business, from the exhibitors' standpoint, looks very bright for the coming year.

The exhibitors in many parts of the territory are leaning toward the daily program. The Intermountain exhibitors protest, however, on the rental prices of today.

Severe Sunday Bill Defeated in Iowa

A bill proposing to raise fines for Sunday violations in Iowa of the closing laws, from a minimum of one dollar and a maximum of five, to a minimum of ten dollars and a maximum of one hundred, has been defeated by concerted action of Iowa exhibitors. The measure died in the committee and there is said to be little chance that it will be resurrected.

St. Louis Exhibitor Notes

The Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis is working hard on several problems, especially censorship. Representatives have appeared lately before the Ways and Means Committee of the Senate, including prominent women, and Miss Mary Gray Peck, of New York. An open meeting of protest against censorship was held in the parlors of the Planters' Hotel February 3, and members of the Woman's Federated clubs, Mothers' Congress, Parent Teachers' Association, clergy, and Social Service Workers, as well as exhibitors and exchange men protested against the passage of the unjust measure which proposes to censor not only pictures, but slides, posters and banners.

The hope was expressed at the last association meeting that the union operators would not press the matter of increased pay just at the present time.

Action was also taken appointing a committee to see the city authorities and point out the injustice of church and other outside showing of pictures without license, tax or restriction according to law, which threatens to become a serious competition to several neighborhood theatres.

Interesting Issue of Paramount-Bray Pictographs

An unusually interesting issue is promised in Paramount-Bray Pictographs No. 56.

The smallest and most intelligent elephant in the country has posed for the camera and goes through a number of tricks quite apart from the ordinary stunts of the circus elephant.

The gigantic task of the subway builders in New York, who in the course of their tunneling are compelled to sweep foundations of tremendous skyscrapers; the engineering skill necessary and comprehensive views of the work, make this one of the best scenes ever shown by the "Magazine-of-the-screen." Drawings supplement actual photographs of the work.

"Colonel Heeza Liar, Detective" is another of the popular series of cartoons depicting the humorous adventures of the animated screen character.

Other subjects as interesting, are also contained in this issue of Pictographs.

Two "Crisis" Shows Go on Tour; Plan Summer Run

A trial of four weeks in Minneapolis has thoroughly tested the strength of "The Crisis," the photoplay feature spectacle founded by William N. Selig on Winston Churchill's novel of Civil War days in St. Louis and Vicksburg, Miss.

Previous to the opening in Chicago it was decided to stage the spectacle in one of Minneapolis leading theatres. The result was that during the four weeks "The Crisis" is reported to have played to more money than any previous spectacle seen in Minneapolis with but few exceptions.

So pleased are Wm. N. Selig and Sherman-Elliott, Inc., with the showing that they have arranged to go into a "Loop" theatre in Chicago the first of May or sooner for an all-Summer run.

Canadian Distributing Firms in Legal Tilt

Metro Pictures, Limited, and Standard Film Service Lock Horns; Films Disappear; Reported Metro's Rights Revoked

THE legal dispute begun when Metro Pictures, Limited, the Montreal concern claiming the original franchise for Canada for Metro pictures, attempted to transfer distribution rights which it is alleged they had granted the Standard Film Service, Ltd., to the Specialty Film Import, Limited, has broadened in scope. Injunctions and restraining orders issued in various Canadian cities have followed each other in quick succession.

Disappearance of Metro films in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg resulted in Metro Pictures, Limited, securing an ex parte injunction restraining Standard Film and associated parties from handling Metro features, or having any in their possession. Despite many efforts few of the films have been recovered, according to word from Canada. Several theatres in Vancouver are still reported to be running Metro subjects, though no one professes to know the source of supply. On completion of their runs they are said to be turned over to the sheriff. An injunction against Metro showings by the Dominion theatre, Vancouver, is reported to have been secured, but as yet is unenforced.

From Vancouver also comes word that J. Ed. Le Beau, a notary, acting for the Metro Pictures Corporation of New York, has just filed a notarial protest cancelling all rights to the Metro features held in Canada by Metro Pictures, Limited. Meanwhile Standard is said to be booking Metro subjects and other state rights features for which it controls the Canadian territory.

A brief review of existing conditions since Metro Pictures, Limited, secured the franchise for Eastern Canada from Metro Pictures Corporation of New York in September, 1915, reveals a tangled state of affairs. According to Herbert Lubin, who organized Metro Pictures, Limited, as fiscal agents, that corporation has since September, 1915, financed the importation of films, and remitted to the New York office the parent company's share of the weekly receipts from rentals. Mr. Lubin later, according to his admission, organized the Starfilms, Limited, which, it is claimed, was named distributing agent, and the Western territory rights was also then secured.

Through various circumstances, Starfilms, Limited, was forced into liquidation. In June, 1916, the Standard Film Service, Ltd., was organized to take over distribution of Metro throughout Canada. The contract, it is said, provided that the new corporation acquire all assets belonging to Starfilms, Limited, especially the exclusive rights to distribute through Canada, Metro pictures, subject to payment of the stipulated royalty of ten per cent. to Metro Pictures, Limited.

The crux of the present disagreement lies in the appointment of A. H. Sawyer, president of Standard, as distributing agent of the Metro program for a period of eight weeks, while transfer was made from one company to another.

In justification of their attempt to transfer the distributing rights to the Specialty Film Import, Limited, the Metro Pictures, Limited, claims that with the expiration of Mr. Sawyer's contract, they were relieved from any responsibility on account of the existing contract with the Standard, which had been rendered void. The Standard, however, claims that it was recognized by both sides that the appointment of Mr. Sawyer was made simply for the purpose stated, and not with the idea of depriving the Standard Film Service of its rights as distributing agent.

AL. E. CHRISTIE is now actively engaged on the early numbers of the two-reel comedy releases which he is instituting in response to demand of the public and of exhibitors who have been having such great success with the Christie one reelers. To his already large company of popular players, Mr. Christie is adding well-known names of the picture-world, and will soon have an announcement as to personnel of the new companies.

The first of the two-reel comedies, announced for release February 15, is "Bride and Gloom," which features Billie Rhodes, Eddie Barry, Harry Rattenberry, Stella Adams and an ample support of pretty girls. This picture had a pre-release showing at a large Los Angeles theatre, and was warmly received. The reviewer of the largest evening paper said that it was "the best two-reel farce comedy ever screened."

The second release, March 1, is "Out for the Coin." The story is by William E. Wing, the well-known scenario writer, and the cast includes Betty Compson, Neal Burns, Eddie Barry, George French and Dave Morris. This comedy had flattering reviews from the trade papers. Following this will come regular releases of two two-reel comedies a month, which will in no wise interfere or conflict with the regular weekly one-reeler.

In preparation are stories by Epes Winthrop Sargent, Margaret Brady, daughter of Cyrus Townsend Brady and other well-known authors. These two-reel comedies can be procured by exhibitors through the system of independent exchanges handling the Christie product.

Animated Dolls Burlesque Well-Known Stars

The Motoy Comedies, which are being produced by the Toyland Film Company of Chicago, are original and new to exhibitors.

The animated doings of these dolls are, in many situations, much more humorous than the efforts of human comedians.

In Motoy Comedies, all the movie stars are burlesqued and Charlie himself cannot cavort in crazier capers than his doll imitator. "Mary" is always the heroine and appears in her pretty curls and coy manners to please her admirers.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Deemster"

(Arrow—Nine Parts—State Rights)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS long-heralded picturization of Hall Caine's famous novel fully lives up to the rosy promises made by the Arrow Film Corporation as to its merits. It is one of the few photodramas that does full justice to its length, and there is so much in it to hold the attention of the spectator that it should prove a most valuable asset to any first-class house. Given a story that is satisfactory in dramatic situations practically from start to finish, the prospective buyer also has the commercial adjunct of the name of Hall Caine, a British novelist of great distinction.

The Reunion

The cast of the picture is headed by Derwent Hall Caine, son of the author, who is known both on the stage in this country and abroad. Mr. Caine is every inch the actor, and there is never a time that he fails to score effectively. The sympathetic nature of his role will react strongly in his behalf to the extent of winning him an unusual number of admirers. Here again does the name of Caine give promise of tremendous advertising possibilities. It seems that, figuring on the state rights buyer's scale, "The Deemster" ranks with the topmost features of the year.

Working on a scenario by Charles Taylor and E. A. Bingham, Howell Hansel has endowed the picture with a production that is at least satisfactory, though never remarkably brilliant. The elaborate settings, picturesque in their atmosphere, the rugged exteriors of the sea coast, and the superlative photography, which includes some excellent light effects, reflect to the credit of the production to such a great degree that Mr. Hansel's rather artificial manner of handling his masses and one or two minor slips in detail are quite overshadowed.

The picturization of Mr. Caine's novel has been done to clear and dramatic effect. While the story never moves at the breakneck gait of a modern five-reel melodrama, none of its passages lacks in the impressiveness and sincerity so noticeable in the novel. The costuming is well done, and never do the actions of the players betray a trace of modernism that might spoil the convincing reproduction of a story of the early eighteenth century.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

On the Isle of Man, off the coast of England, Danel Mylrea (Mr. Caine), son of the Bishop of Man (Sidney Bracey), takes to the sea in preference to the church. The Deemster (Albert Froom), highest civil authority of the settlement, frowns on Daniel's attentions to his daughter, Mona (Marian Swayne). Her brother Ewan (K. Barns Clarendon) resents a clandestine meeting between Daniel and Mona, and attacks the former. They fight, and Ewan is killed. Subsequently the Deemster plots to have Daniel's life, but the Bishop exercises his prerogative, and instead sentences his son to total banishment from the civilized portion of the isle. In time a plague sweeps the place and a monk crossing the stormy channel with a cure dies in Ewan's cabin. Donning the monk's garments, Ewan takes the cure to the village and administers to the sick. His last portion goes to his bitter enemy, the Deemster. The people discover Ewan's real identity, and in their eyes he is vindicated. He goes back to his lonely home, is followed by Mona, who comforts him until his death.

"The Argyle Case"

(Selznick Picture—Seven Parts—Screen Time Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

ROBERT WARWICK as a clean-cut "business detective" is a success. The play from which this story is adapted was written in collaboration with Detective Burns, and was one of the big Broadway successes. As a picture story it runs smoothly and will be voted by the average audience a success. It will be hard for a critical spectator to see the probability of some of the lightning preparations for the use of the dictaphone; only a miracle would seem to save the detectives themselves from capture; but to the average audience this may add a thrill. The main theme is the discovery of the thumbprints, and, with the aid of the latest scientific instruments, by cold calculation and expert deduction from facts, locating a murderer by his own confession. This is all worked out to a nicety and very well presented. The only flaw in the production is the overacting and sneering of the regular detectives, who are supposed to be stupid, but would surely be a little more human in real life. We presume they felt they had to "act." The production is considerably above the average program quality, and with the star and prestige of the stage play should "get the money."

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Argyle (Frank McGlynn), money master, desires his son to marry Mary Mazuret (Elaine Hammerstein), daughter of a friend who had given his baby child to him for his care on his deathbed, brokenhearted. Mary's father had never recovered from the blow of his wife's deserting him. Bruce Argyle (Charles Hines), the son, is not in love with Mary, but marries a girl of his own choice. He is disinherited, and a new will is made in favor of Mary. That night Argyle is found stark and dead in his library, and Mary, who, sleepless at the injustice to Bruce, had heard the outer door slam and gone downstairs to investigate, is seen by the servant returning to her room.

Detective and Murderer Take Acount of One Another

The police are called at the instance of Hurley (Frank Evans), Argyle's lawyer, and Mary is accused of the crime. Bruce, shocked at this turn of events, employs Asche Kayton (Robert Warwick), the famous detective, who by a process of elimination and deduction, with the aid of clever thumbprint and detectophone investigation, narrows the guilt down to Hurley or Nellie Marsh (Mary Allen), Mary's mother, who is now a member of a gang of counterfeiters.

An exciting raid on the den of the counterfeiters precedes the climax, when Kayton, by accusing Hurley and getting an immediate denial, causes Hurley to attempt to throw the guilt on Nellie. This accusation Nellie overhears, and she comes to her own defense by telling the story of the murder, which breaks down Hurley's composure, and all ends happily, with Mary in the arms of Kayton.

"The Great Secret"

(Metro Serial—Chapters Six, Seven and Eight; Two Reels Each)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THIS is a real "serial," in that every chapter leaves you hanging in midair and absolutely obliged to come back the next week and see the hero rescued. Chapter six fades away with the villain poised over the hero, apparently in the act of plunging a long stiletto into his unconscious breast, with not a suggestion of a rescuer in sight. Chapter seven shuts off with the discovery by the arch villains that the hero in disguise is in their very clutches. How can he escape? Chapter eight finds the hero and heroine safely home, but the Secret Seven decide, in the last hundred feet, that a new and surely successful plot can be put into operation.

Mr. Bushman is physically exactly what the role calls for, and in these strenuous chapters appears to endure real physical hardship. Strong acting as well as action distinguish this from the average serial melodrama.

The real strength of the picture is, of course, the personality and popularity of the leads. Enough novelty and thrill is furnished to satisfy anybody, and yet it is not too impossible and improbable to spoil the real dramatic effect.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

In the role of the wealthy young clubman, William Strong (Francis X. Bushman), the hero of this story has rescued Beverly Clarke (Beverly Bayne) from a band of kidnappers and is seeking to foil a band of arch conspirators, the Secret Seven, of whom Beverly's father was a member. The conspirators seek to get possession of a large fortune in a casket left Beverly by her father. They have again seized Beverly, and William, attempting to follow, has been beaten up and has also discovered that his fiancee, Eunice Morton (Dorothy Hydell) is unfaithful to him.

Chinese Torment—Watching Death's Call Approach

Chapter six finds William taken to his bed, and in a delirium of fever. Wee See, his faithful servant, has seen Beverly disappear into a secret room and tries to find her. The Seven, led by Dr. Zulph, the arch-conspirator (Edward Connelly), draw lots to see who shall now put William, helpless, beyond further trouble making. Just as the murder is about to be committed the Great Master himself (Fred R. Stanton) receives word of the plot. Dagger in air—

Chapter seven opens with the arrival of a messenger from the Great Master, just in time to save William, who does not know of his close call. Wee See meantime has discovered important plots and has located Beverly, who has been horrified by threats to throw her into an opium den, and otherwise is much distressed. Wee See reports all this to Detective Ackerton (William Calhoun), and William, overhearing him, refuses to stay in bed longer and, leaving by the window, he and Wee See go to rescue Beverly. He disguises himself as a distinguished Chinaman, and with Wee See's help gets by all the guards to the secret chamber, where he unmasks to Beverly. Just as they are planning escape he is discovered and a general alarm given.

Chapter eight finds William in a seemingly hopeless resistance to the band of Chinese highbinders and cut-throats. He is bound and his executioner placed over him; but Chinese love of torturing their victims takes too long a chance, and, just in the nick of time, Wee See returns with help. Both escape. But this is only the beginning of new trials. The Great Master, after seeing in a vision his past disappointment in love, for which Dr. Zulph is responsible, assumes personal direction of a new plot, and it is evident the Secret Seven is planning dire consequences, with internal dissension in their ranks.

"The Single Code"

(Centaur-Mutual—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THIS picture, directed by Thomas Ricketts, has for its theme "Morality is a word with two meanings, one for the man and one for the woman," and fruitful as it is, the subject is well handled throughout, with the exception that the finish is too abrupt, and leaves the audience wondering how a man whose earlier transgressions had, upon exposure, been freely forgiven by his wife, could, on hearing of her earlier transgressions, forget all that he had said and written on the subject, spurn his wife and leave her in anguish. Before marriage the man, when editor of the Purist Magazine, had in a lecture said, "Show me a woman who has sinned. I will not shun her, but I will extend a merciful hand to help her up." But that's before his marriage, and the sinning woman might be anybody but his own wife. When a jealous schoolmate of the girl's informs the man of his wife's indiscretions at the academy, he loses his self-control, and when abjured by his wife to reflect his own writings on the subject, and being reminded that she, the wife, had forgiven his transgressions, he wildly exclaims "But you are different, you are my wife." The man's excuse is "Of course, I was only human;" the woman's excuse, "I loved him." The moral of the film is clear—proving conclusively that man might sin ad. lib. and still be received in gentle society, but a woman's sinning is a different matter, and only tends to relegate her to degradation, if not oblivion. Florence Printy as Lorrie Stuart makes a charming, happy-go-lucky schoolgirl, just as much as later she makes a charming married woman and hostess, and Crane Wilbur as Hugh Carrington fills his part to perfection. The picture is well staged; exteriors and interiors alike are well selected, and in the majority of instances well photographed.

It is an interest-compelling picture; it runs smoothly throughout, and the subtitles are sufficient without being unduly lengthy. It should prove a winner from a box-office standpoint at any of the higher grade theatres.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The story involves a young graduate, Hugh Carrington, having been lured into visiting Olga Kildare (Olive Stokes), a woman of vampirish proclivities, is blackmailed by her when he seeks to abandon his illicit relations. Thinking he has rid himself of her, he assumes the editorship of a magazine, as above remarked, and poses as a champion of a single standard of morals for man and woman.

Lorrie Stuart, the schoolgirl, who has been deceived and has made ample atonement for her sin, hears Carrington lecture on the subject before a woman's club, and is perceptibly impressed with his utterances. She volunteers to help in his rescue mission work. They meet frequently, acquaintance ripens into love, and eventually they are married—neither telling the other of their earlier misdeeds.

After some time, however, Carrington's friend (?) and legal adviser, being surprised trying to take advantage of his friend's wife, informs Lorrie of her husband's earlier mesalliance with Olga Kildare—but the woman's heart is touched and she condones the offence. Shortly after, though, when Margaret Winfield (Nan Christy), Lorrie's former schoolmate, in a moment of pique and jealousy at Lorrie's evident comfort and happiness, informs the husband of the fact that a certain Dick Baxter (John Oaker) was the father of Lorrie's illegitimate child and the above-mentioned denouement follows.

Others in the cast are Dr. Allen (Harrish Ingraham) and Rodman Wray ,the lawyer (Ernesto Garcia).

"Her Own People"

(Pallas-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

YOU can certainly count this picture as out of the ordinary. Aside from the press agent's announcement that the director succeeded in getting a trout to register excitement, a deer to express surprise, and a butterfly to show happiness, all of which important scenes were nearly ruined by too much cutting, for you have to watch for them or you won't see them, this picture is as attractive as such a theme can be conceived to be.

It is hard to imagine a white man of great wealth honorably falling in love with an Indian squaw, and then sending his half-breed daughter East to be educated among his old acquaintances. But Miss Ulrich makes all this seem possible, and those to whom such a situation is admissible through the fiction of romance will enjoy this play more than anything they have seen in some time. The direction of this story by Julia Ivers will make this production as much of a classic in pictures as Miss Ulrich's stage performances in "The Bird of Paradise" as a Hawaiian beauty. Miss Ulrich surely fits these exotic types.

We think most audiences will enjoy this play, chiefly because of the fine settings and wonderful manner in which Miss Ulrich makes Alona a real Indian maiden. We want to congratulate the director, also, on not yielding to the temptation of infusing too much extraneous Indian atmosphere, but sticking strictly to the theme of the story.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Kemp (Howard Davies) is very wealthy. He is engaged to Eleanor Dutton (Adelaide Woods), but Eleanor loves another, and Kemp overhears her declaration. Heartbroken, he seeks the farthest fastnesses of the frontier, and not until he meets Morning Star (Gail Brooks) and in her savage sincerity finds true love is he reconciled.

Years later we see Kemp and Alona (Leonore Ulrich), the daughter of this marriage, who is her father's idol. Finally deciding she must not be deprived of the advantages of white civilization, he returns East with Alona, and then a pretty romance is completed between Alona and Frank Colvin (Colin Chase), a poor prospector, whose mine Alona buys secretly to test his love for her, which remains true in spite of his new prosperity, and with the sanction of his mother and sister, who find Alona a dream of beauty in her changed surroundings.

"The Last of the Ingrahams"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MR. INCE'S writers and directors are forever harping on the hollowness of civilization. To them the word is synonymous with barbarism. "The Last of the Ingrahams" is their latest picture that shows a staid and conventional collection of people to have founded their principles on a falsity. The main character of the story is an inebriate. For full two reels he imbibes goodly portions of whisky whenever he holds the screen. He becomes weaker and weaker during this space of film, and so correspondingly runs the picture up to the point of his reformation. The latter parts of it teem with good old melodrama and hectic speeches that tend to adopt the style of "Don't accuse her, you hounds; seek out the man."

There is, to be sure, a lot of truth in John Lynch's story. And it has been given a characteristic Ince production by Walter Edwards. Its chief fault is that it gives too much of the same line of action to the spectator. That it is a perfectly obvious story, too, no one will deny. The ending hovers in the offing quite soon after the beginning. But withal there is a certain appeal, what with the story's two "lost souls" that triumph over popular prejudice and their own misfortunes.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

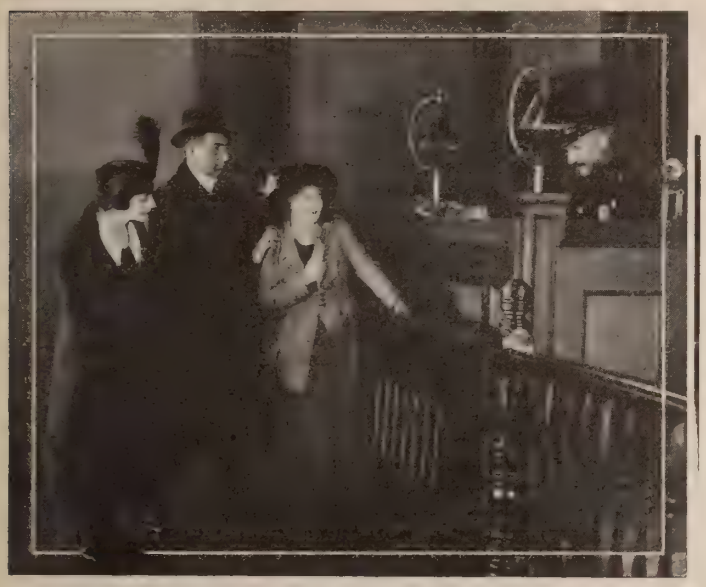
Jules Ingraham (William Desmond) is the last in line of a once respected family. He lives in a continual state of drunkenness in the old house, situated on the outskirts of a New England coast village. His butler (Walt Whitman) is the only human that will have anything to do with him. The time comes when he is evicted by Rufus Moore (Robert McKim), the most respected citizen in the village. He seeks refuge with Mercy Reed (Margery Wilson) a woman who in other years misplaced her confidence. Moore was the man, of course. Mercy succeeds in reforming Jules, and the two live in peace until the civilized townsfolk take measures to do away with them. A mob goes to the house, intending to take Mercy and tar and feather her. Jules defends her, and then in the midst of the storm Mercy reveals the respected citizen, Moore, as a scoundrel. He is further disgraced when it is revealed that he was attempting to steal property belonging to Jules.

"The Adventurer"

(U. S. Amusement Corp.)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

UPTON SINCLAIR'S famous novel, "The Adventurer," picturized and produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, featuring Marion Swayne, loses none of its vital points in the process of picturization, but, rather, appears to have some of its main features accentuated. The picture allows the star full play for her dramatic abilities, and she is ably assisted by others in the cast. The photography is remarkably good throughout, whether it be a mansion or a barn, all are faithfully reproduced. The picture has its lesson, and it leaves no doubt as to its object—viz., the exposure of the atrocities committed and beneficences omitted under the guise of "organized charities." There are thrills aplenty throughout, and everything gradually works up to a stunning climax, where young Adams presents himself and announces his object in palming off a dead man's body as that of his own by substituting his clothing for that of the corpse's—his object being to see to what uses his father's millions were being put, he having been disinherited and the bulk of his father's wealth having been put aside for "charity."



The production reflects great credit on Madam Blaché, who directed the filming for the U. S. Amusement Corporation, and it will, without a doubt, be well received wherever shown.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Following the old man's death, his son being practically disinherited, is reported to have gone on a rampage to "blow in" the small amount he did receive from the estate, and Dorothy (Marion Swayne), out of work and desperate, is about to commit suicide, when prevented from so doing by a stranger, Jim (Pell Trenton). He dissuades her, and on learning of her plight of impecuniousness, volunteers to go and borrow some money from a friend. He returns with money and also with a pistol wound in his shoulder. Dorothy nurses him, and having satisfied the landlady's demands for room rent, engages the room next to hers for the stranger, whom she calls "brother" to the landlady. On recovery a cigarette case with the monogram "J. A." is found in the girl's room and identified by Margaret Adams (Ethel Stanard) as her gift to her brother, whom all believe dead.

In the meantime Miss Adams has overheard enough from the dispensers of her father's gifts to charity to convince herself that the funds are not going into the right channels, and, on announcing herself, is chloroformed and placed in an auto for removal to a quiet and safe asylum. But the auto is stolen, and on being chased and overhauled by Mortimer Wiley (Kirk Brown) and Austin (Charles Halton)—who are fearful of their own futures should the facts of their handling of the funds become known—is found to contain young Adams and a private detective, whose services he had enlisted to expose the fraud.

It all is clear now. The money he "borrowed" for Dorothy he took from the safe in his father's home and got shot in consequence. He made another nocturnal visit to abstract certain books and documents from the safe, when he learns of the fate of his sister and decamps in the auto wherein she had been placed. A fitting finish for the bunch is their being placed behind the bars for a spell.

Three Educationals

("Mammals of Strange Form," "American Bears" and "The Austrian Patrol")

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"MAMMALS OF STRANGE FORM" is the second five hundred foot release of the Raymond L. Ditmars educationals. Like its predecessor, it gives the spectator a laugh hand in hand with a lesson. For instance, the subtitle tells you that the wart hog is a dangerous animal coming, but a funny one going. You are convinced. Before he is a vicious looking brute, but behind—with his shoe-string tail—he appears ridiculous. One of the elephant's ancestors, a Malayan tapir, that has the beginnings of the elephant's trunk but not the ending, is an interesting study, while the spectacle of a hippopotamus weighing over five thousand pounds frisking about like a dog is one of the two most comical sights we have seen in a month. Chaplin was the other. An idea of the expense to which the New York Zoological Society goes is given in showing two pygmy hippopotami that cost $12,000 between them.

"American Bears," another half-reel Ditmars subject, while not so unusual, contains some interesting pictures of the bears in captivity in New York. You learn that they like cod liver oil as much as humans hate it, and that one of the Kadiak species begs like a baby for his food.

"The Austrian Patrol" is a reel that has twofold interest, owing to the fact that it presents activities of the Austrian patrol.

"Pearl of the Army"

(Pathe—Eleventh Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AN even stronger vein of suspense than usual runs through this chapter, which goes under the title of "A Million Volunteers." The fact that one of the Silent Menaces is captured at the close and his face revealed also lays emphasis on the fact that there are many more than one of the masked men prowling about.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Major Brent (Theodore Friebus) presses his suit for the hand of Pearl (Pearl White), and she says that she will marry him providing the Silent Menace is captured. She believes that the Menace is the only person who will be able to clear the name of Captain Payne, her fiance, who was to all appearances killed in the first episode. After an exciting series of incidents, in which the Silent Menace is a prominent figure, he is captured. The mask is torn from his face and there stands revealed a man who claims that he is only one of the followers of the real Menace.

"Polly Redhead"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CERTAIN very humorous scenes and a large number of close-ups, in which a little youngster whom the women will declare a "darling" is the central figure, put just the required amount of life in "Polly Redhead" to qualify it as a worthy picture. When shown at the Rialto the audience was willing to overlook something of a laborious introduction in favor of the good points mentioned, which are supplemented by a fine atmosphere and an exceedingly good production. "Polly Redhead" is as harmless as a May day and just about as refreshing.

Ella Hall is featured as the red-headed Polly who acts as housekeeper to a London lawyer. She is always the young girl of thirteen or fourteen years perhaps, an her ability to keep within the subscribed bounds of her immature character works to realistic effect. Polly spends much of her time looking after the Lump, her little brother. A small fellow bearing the big name of William Worthington, Jr., looks after this part with infinite pleasure, it seems. He is an unusual baby, and no doubt will become as famous as his father some day.

The scenario, by E. J. Clawson, was founded on Edgar Jep-

son's "Pollyooly" stories, and has been produced in good fashion by Jack Conway.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Polly (Miss Hall) spends her time caring for her brother and keeping house for two lawyers (George Webb and Dick La Reno). A husband and wife (Charles Mailes and Gretchen Lederer) have separated, and Marion (Miss Hall), the daughter, lives with her father. The young lawyer gets the idea that Polly can take the place of Marion while she runs away with her mother, and makes the substitution. This ultimately results in a reunion of Marion's parents and a general pleasant ending for all concerned.

"Easy Street"

(Chaplin-Mutual—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S walk was never so funny as in "Easy Street." He seems to be featuring it again. He brings the wild chase in too, the dodging, the tripping and the allied slapstick arts. In our innocence we once thought that the chase of this sort had gone out of style, so to speak, but when we saw an audience at the Rialto convulsed over it all our eyes were opened. There are innumerable highly amusing gags in "Easy Street" too. In fact the by-play of Chaplin was never so amusing. It is appreciated, but no clever incidental business can ever eclipse the chase in the fan's heart.

Charlie Finds Himself "On Easy Street"

A good production was given the picture and the supporting cast, headed by Edna Purviance, is equal to any situation. You can use the catch line, "A Laugh in Every Scene," in advertising "Easy Street" and your conscience won't hurt a bit.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Chaplin is introduced as a member of the dregs of society. He dozes outside a mission as the strains of "Onward Christian Soldiers" float out on the air. He goes in and sees the fair leader of the mission and then and there decides to reform. He becomes a policeman and is given Easy street to patrol. You have been shown before that Easy street is only easy for the toughs. One by one policemen are brought in to headquarters beaten to a pulp. But Chaplin meanders innocently down the street. The gang leader, a big brute of a fellow, he overcomes by sticking his head in the globe of a lamp post and turning on the gas. He previously tries hitting him over the head with a club, but it has no effect. Finally, due to the new cop, Easy street is made respectable, and the young mission lady is rewarded for placing her faith in the bum of the first scene.

"Patria"

(International-Pathe—Sixth Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE story makes a decided move in this number, entitled "Alias Nemesis," in that Elaine, the dancer and counterpart of Patria, is killed. The action is melodramatic, as usual, and the chief spectacular feature is a masked ball, which affords Mrs. Castle opportunity to wear an elaborate costume.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Patria (Mrs. Castle) comes out of hiding to attend the ball given by the imposter, Elaine. She is accompanied by Captain Parr (Milton Sills). Going to her room, Patria sends word that she wishes to see Elaine, and when the dancer arrives she forces her to change costumes. Elaine's manager, Edouard, enters at that moment, and in a drunken fury shoots and kills her. When Baron Huroki and the other conspirators arrive, Patria assumes the role of Elaine and immediately gains their confidence.

"The Bad Boy"

(Fine Arts-Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE BAD BOY" is one of the most delightfully human pictures that have come along in quite some time. Frank Woods, in writing it, has accomplished that which very few screen authors have done. He has supplied his star, Robert Harron, with a vehicle and has succeeded in disguising the fact that it is a vehicle. In other words, the star has a congenial role, but it is not the whole picture. In the title part Mr. Harron appears as a typical bad boy of a small country town. He goes in swimming in the reservoir and when the constable comes pushes him in, too. He shows off for the new girl at school after the correct fashion, and when he dresses up, with a collar and a tie and a hair comb, he is so real that you feel tickled and patronizing.

With all its wealth of colorful incident "The Bad Boy" has a heart interest story that sustains the interest all the time. It is of the kind where laughs and pathos are intermingled, combined to a degree of complete satisfaction. Mr. Harron is ideally suited to portray his role, and his support, in the shape of Mildred Harris, Josephine Crowell, Richard Cummings and William H. Brown, is excellent. Chester Withey produced. He has handled the story in superb fashion.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jimmie Bates (Mr. Harron) is the bad boy of the town. His parents (Richard Cummings and Josephine Crowell) tolerate his pranks until one day, having grown unusually bad, he is beaten by his father to such an extent that the open road looks good to him. He leaves home in a rage, mad at everybody, including his sweetheart (Mildred Harris). He falls in with crooks and ends up by coming back to his home town with the purpose of robbing the bank. But, thanks to the influence of the girl, he decides to turn straight, and, turning against his companions, he saves the day. His father, however, will not believe that he has turned honest, and it is only after one of the crooks has sworn that he turned against them that his name is cleared and he is once more restored in the good graces of the family.

"A Square Deal"

(World Film—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is a picture of Greenwich Village folk, who are generally believed to constitute the Bohemian set of New York City. It makes a pleasing release, very well supplied with action, and containing some characterizations that are drawn to create contrast of the appealing sort. That there are certain episodes in which the society butterfly figures that are anything but convincing on one will deny, but the rest of the picture is strong to a fine point of realism and has been done with such good taste that the artificial parts may easily be overlooked.

"A Friend in Need"

The friendship of those in the village for each other during their struggles for success supplies the background for the drama. There, we are told, friendship is greater than love. Be that as it may, the fact remains that the characters in L. V. Jefferson's picture consider it such, and the theme is responsible for not a few situations of true heart interest. Harley Knoles has given the picture a production that for the most part abounds in a realistic atmosphere.

Carlyle Blackwell is nominally featured, for the exhibitor's sake no doubt, and he does plenty of good work, but Henry Hull as Mark deserves considerable notice. For his first picture, he does exceedingly well and acts his role with sincerity every minute of the time, only occasionally betraying a lack of suppression that he should remedy in the future. He gives promise of becoming that asset to the screen which he is at present to the stage, starring as he is in one of Mr. Brady's most successful plays, "The Man Who Came Back."

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When Mark Dunbar (Henry Hull) attains success in the literary world be soon drifts away from his best friends, Doris Golden (June Elvidge), a newspaper woman, and Hugh Eltinge (Carlyle Blackwell), an artist. As soon as he has rescued Ruby Trailes (Muriel Ostriche) from drowning he is captivated by her and fails to see her shallowness. Married, he has just cause to regret, his wife, besides running up enormous bills, misinterprets his friendship with Doris. Hugh, who silently loves Doris himself, plans to free Mark from his unhappy marriage, and, posing as a newly made millionaire, he soon wins the fickle admiration of Ruby. Mark discovers the two in a compromising position and obtains a divorce. Not until then does he learn to what lengths Hugh has gone to restore him to the woman he really loves.

"Crime and Punishment"

(Arrow-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picturization of Fyodor Dostoevsky's book offers a story that will appeal to all classes in general and the masses in particular. Its central character, a Russian who is possessed of the idea that with the death of one miserly rich person, hundreds of the poor and needy may be benefited, has been drawn with skill by the author and has been played convincingly by the English actor, Derwent Hall Caine. While the picture offers little opportunity for characterization, which is so often necessary to make a convincing story, the five reels are possessed of an unusual amount of action that always retains the interest.

In the matter of production, "Crime and Punishment" is hardly consistent with the Pathe standard. The scenes of poverty and squalor which form the background for practically all the action are realistic to a degree, but in some of the scenes, mainly in the office where a backdrop that is undeniably a backdrop is hung, the mechanics of the studio are quite obviously revealed.

The Murder of the Miser

In the print exhibited for review the photographic work was of an order very low.

Pathe has made co-operative arrangements with the MacMillan Company, publishers of the book, "Crime and Punishment," for the issue of a special edition, and the advertising opportunities resulting from this should be realized by the exhibitor. The name of Mr. Caine should not be forgotten either. There are a large number of dramatic scenes which he enacts with as telling a show of emotional work as could be desired.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Rodin (Derwent Hall Caine) has been obliged to flee from his native land owing to his radical ideas. In the new country he kills Valeskoff (Sidney Bracey), an old miser who oppressed the poor. It is Rodin's intention to distribute Valeskoff's money among the poor. Porphyius (Robert Cummings) is accused of the crime, and is tortured so by the third degree that he confesses it to gain peace. Rodin believes his cause triumphant until he comes in contact with a "lost sister of the streets" (Marguerite Courtot), who instills in him a sense of the wrong of his act by talking of religion. As a result Rodin rejects his ideas and gives himself over to the police.

"Sloth"

(Fourth of the "Seven Deadly Sins" Series—McClure-Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"SLOTH" is designed to arouse patriotism, and seems to be a timely release. Eve, the heroine, this time is foolishly peeved because her fiance, Adam, is obliged to go to the Mexican border with the National Guard, and so she sits herself down to a book of American history and reads various thrilling episodes in which women were the principal figures. "Sloth" does not carry any sustained interest, and some of the scenes in the historic episodes are rather poorly done, but one might hazard a guess that with appropriate music the picture will get over to good effect. Charlotte Walker has the leading role in the stories.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Eve (Shirley Mason), on bidding her fiance, Adam (George Le Guere), farewell, reads first of the episode of Sally Wells (Miss Walker), who in the early days of the first settlers braved Indians and wild animals to preserve a home for herself and family. Then she follows the course of Margaret Brent (Miss Walker), who by her quick wit turned a band of pirates who attacked her into devoted followers, and after this comes the battle of Monmouth in the Revolution, when Molly Pitcher (Miss Walker), surrounded by a group of brave women, turned the tide of battle against the British when all seemed lost. Fired with enthusiasm by these stories, Eve goes to the front herself and becomes a Red Cross nurse, serving Adam's regiment as fearlessly as any of the historic heroines might have done.

"The Black Wolf"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THE exhibitor is receiving in this release an average Lasky picture. "The Black Wolf" has to be "averaged" in order to convey to the exhibitor its value to him in the box office.

Jean Barrymore's play had fine prospects of making a very unusually good picture. The kick and the punch is there of several good situations, and the principal role calls for a dare-devil, truly likable man of action kind of hero, whose real blue blood stuck out all over him, a character that would attract man and woman alike. We can't say Lou-Tellegen makes us feel this way. The Black Wolf of the story did not control his band through his physical beauty and charming poses. The women of the audience may see a likeable Black Wolf in Mr. Tellegen's interpretation of the part, but we are very sure the male contingent would like a little more suppression of the obvious ego sticking out in every scene and almost every move and pose.

The story was good and the supporting cast satisfactory, although Nell Shipman did not appear to register as conspicuously a Spanish type. Her work was very pleasing, though, and as her mother was American she could be excused from looking the usual Spanish part.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Black Wolf, a bandit (Lou-Tellegen), gains the ill will of Don Philip (H. J. Herbert) by his depredations and sarcastic messages to the Duke. Donna Isabel (Nell Shipman), daughter of the Chancellor (James Neill), wishes to marry Isabel for her American inherited wealth. Isabel detests the Duke, and when pressed by him in the forest, is rescued by Black Wolf, whose men also secure the Duke's signet ring. This leads to the discovery, by comparison of the ring and a locket about Black Wolf's neck, that he is in reality the lost Duke. Old Luis (Paul Wiegel), a charcoal burner, has raised him. Then it appears that the Chancellor, Isabel's father, can throw some light on the identity of the Black Wolf. Meanwhile the present Duke has exacted a promise of marriage from Isabel if he would spare Black Wolf's life. This is settled by a duel, in which the real Duke wins the girl, so that her love for the Black Wolf can legally result in her happiness as the wife of the man she loves, as a Duchess.

The Black Wolf Learns of His Royal Blood

"The Black Stork"

(Sherriott Pictures—Five Reels—States Rights)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

YOU cannot classify "The Black Stork" as entertainment. Some of its scenes qualify it more for the hospital clinic than for the cosmopolitan audience in the motion picture house. Its contents are based on the case of Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, the Chicago specialist who excited much comment some time ago in refusing to operate on a hopelessly deformed baby that its useless life might be saved. It is rather an unpleasant thing to sit in your chair and look at that baby, not once, but several times. There are other terribly twisted babies and children shown that will serve to open the eyes of the general public to harsh realities.

In fact, "The Black Stork," while teaching an unforgettable lesson, contains other revelations that sort of grate on one's sensibilities when flaunted on a public screen. A scene showing a Southern "gentleman" just out of the embrace of a diseased slave, whose face is a mass of sores, is a sight that should be eliminated before the reformers get a chance to condemn the whole business for it. And when Leffingwell in the mirror sees a vision of his wretched grandfather bearing facial marks of his cursed act, you would consider a scene depicting the vilest murder ever perpetrated as light drama by comparison.

The picture is a plea for better babies from first to last; a plea for the sacrificing of the foolish convention that binds doctors to save a human life when the life is utterly miserable. All well and good! The idea will get both support and attacks which makes any picture valuable. A story has been supplied by Jack Lait, which is chiefly designed to offset the miserable life led by a deformed baby who was allowed to live.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Claude Leffingwell (Hamilton Revelle) marries Anne (Elsie Esmond), knowing that the sins of his ancestors should create a barrier between him and any woman.. When a child is born to Anne it is a wretched bundle of bones. The doctor (Dr. Haiselden himself) urges the parents to permit him to allow it to die. In a vision the mother sees her son's future miserable existence. Henry Bergman in this role does some horribly realistic acting. And with the end of the vision Anne comes to Dr. Haiselden's way of thinking.

"One of Many"

(Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THE story of this picture will not be particularly welcome in many theatres which will present it, none the less, to their patrons, because it is released on a program. The acting of Miss Nelson is worthy of sincere praise, we think the best she has done to date, so we do not want to be misunderstood in this criticism. The suggestion that there could be an excuse for a woman to sell herself, to save her mother's life through the money she could furnish in this way, is hardly a new theme, and is always an unpleasant one, not in accordance with accepted moral standards.

A great many titles are used, largely of a moral-pointing nature, with several scriptural allusions. This is effective, as is always the case, and again we wish to say that Miss Nelson's portrayal measures up to the difficult requirements of a saintly and chastened woman. The man's forgiveness of the woman who sinned is the moral of the play.

The supporting cast was excellent, headed by Niles Welch, who if anything put too much feeling into his part as the young man who was willing to take this woman, knowing her past, in the beautiful spirit of forgiveness preached by Christ himself.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mrs. Bryson (Caroline Harris) and her two daughters, Shirley (Frances Nelson) and Emma (Mary Mersch), live happily, but in such poverty! The mother needs the bracing air of some mountain retreat, or it is evident her health will finally fail her. Shirley, as the prettiest girl in the little manicure shop, is noticed by Wilfred Templeton (Harold Entwhistle). He proposes to establish her in luxury, and to furnish money to send her mother away, if she will but live with him. The outcome is Shirley's yielding. Then even the servants make her feel her degradation, and when her sister, coming to see her grand new home, discovers the absence of a wedding ring, Shirley can bear it no longer and Wilfred leaves her on discovering her feeling. Now the aftermath comes, with the wonderful new love of Harold Templeton (Niles Welch), who knows nothing of Shirley's previous relations. He finds her in a cabaret, where he is wasting his life in loneliness, and protecting her from insult wins her instant admiration. Her charm makes a man of him, and when, after she has married him, his father, coming to congratulate him, uncovers Shirley's past to him, Harold falters but once, then, realizing the depth of his trust, and his marriage vow to let NO MAN put them asunder, he returns to Shirley with unbounded love and forgiveness.

"The Accomplice"

(Sherrill-Art Drama—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THIS play will be classed as society drama, with melodramatic inserts and a dash of mystery thrown in. It has the merit of well-sustained plot and suspense interest, although there are too many themes carried along at once to do any one of them justice. The majority of the roles are well cast, the only serious fault being the dividing up of the interest into too many parts. There is not really a dominant leading role in the play.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Two separate themes are carried along side by side through the first three reels. Katherine Harcourt (Dorothy Bernard) and Dick Harcourt (Jack Sherrill) are wealthy brother and sister, but where the brother has reformed from idle ways that might get him in trouble, the sister is just reaching the danger stage in her toying with the night life of New York.

And so when a third theme is introduced, and Jose (Tom Ward) comes from Buenos Ayres to new York to get the wife who deserted him and her children, and murders the woman, Pepita (Jean Stuart), who has become a dancing partner of Antonio (Joseph Granby) in the cabarets, the plot is ready for its final unfolding.

Katherine, accompanying Antonio to a doubtful hotel after the dance, escapes from him when she realizes that he is a dangerous lover; she alone, being with Antonio that night, can prove his alibi for the murder of Pepita, with whom he is known to have quarreled just before. Miriam Collins, Dick's girl (Florence Hamilton), self-sacrificing, takes the blame on herself, and Dick, believing her guilty and not knowing of his sister's wrong, is stunned. Miriam's goodness reunites father and son, who have quarreled over his insistence on marrying a working girl.

"The Saintly Sinner"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THAT such a picture as this should bear the brand of Bluebird seems not altogether consistent with the high standard that this company has recently set for itself. It presents the story of a girl who sets out to ruin the man who ruined her father, and she succeeds gloriously from her own point of view, and besides she is the means of making a man out of the dissolute son of the state's governor. The presence of a governor in a picture usually means the introduction of the electric chair also. It is here in all its gruesomeness, and is flashed while the keepers are preparing the heroine for its deadly embrace. Various means have been employed by the author, L. H. Hutton, to extract suspense from the late arrival of the governor's pardon. The 'phone gets out of order for a starter, and the girl is led to the chair. The electrician pushes the switch—but the fuse blows out! These events might be gruesome were they not so obviously done as a last resort to save the picture.

In fact, the whole of "The Saintly Sinner" is so obviously artificial that its entertainment value is many degrees below par. If the leads, Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Mulhall, are at all popular their presence at the head of the cast may help as to advertising. But there is nothing else in the picture that may be placed on the credit side even by hazard.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jane Lee (Ruth Stonehouse) is coveted by John Brock (Henry Devries), who by ruining him through the market, has caused the death of her father.

Through Brock's treachery Jane is forced to serve a term in prison in payment of a crime which she did not commit. Released, she joins forces with Richard White (Raymond Whittaker), who is also plotting Brock's downfall. Jane succeeds in driving her enemy to drink and ruin. This done White shows he's black, and, in protecting a girl from him, Jane kills him. This leads to a trial, her conviction, and then her ultimate pardon, due to the interference of George (Jack Mulhall), the governor's son, whom she has reformed.

"Max Comes Across"

(Essanay—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MAX LINDER'S first comedy, made in America, quite justifies its classification, although from the Frenchman's reputation backed up by his performances in the past we have been led to expect something better. Mr. Linder is still saturated with the continental idea of humor which doesn't always score in our own country. He will learn our standard of humor in time no doubt, for the simple reason that he is a natural comedian and in the meantime the exhibitor may count on the international fame of Linder and the big advertising campaign launched by Essanay in connection with these pictures to make them more than valuable to the box office.

"Max Comes Across" is handicapped by practically a total lack of story. To cover up this deficit each episode of the picture has been lengthened until the humor of it is considerably diluted. Mr. Linder is funny while playing a piano aboard ship. The piano persists in sliding away from him and back again with a regularity that is comical at first but which grows tiresome after a while. A flash or two would be enough. But there are some moments in "Max Comes Across" that are truly humorous. No one can have as much fun with a suit of clothes many times too large for him as Mr. Linder. Here seems to be his natural comical sphere at present. He can walk around the deck of the ship and drop his trousers a reef or two with every step and make you laugh. He is never vulgar while so doing. Whether or not the majority of motion picture audiences will countenance his expression and that of many others on realizing the condition of their stomachs while on the high seas is only a matter of conjecture.

The incidents of the picture are based on Mr. Linder's voyage from France to America. From all pictured accounts he had a very varied trip of it. Among other things he met a ravishingly pretty young girl (not named in the cast), with whom he carried on a flirtation that eventually ended in a kiss. Mr. Linder has no superior in picking pretty girls. The young lady of the lead fortifies this statement with as much pulchritude as any one could ask for, while a number of extra girls are noticeable for their beauty.

THE STORY

A representative of the Essanay company visits Max in France and presents him with a contract. He and his friend (Ernest Maupain) embark for America despite the submarine scare. The rolling motion of the ship plays havoc with the diners and the sleepers too. Max gets the idea that it would be a fine stunt to play a joke on Maupain, so he gets the captain to wake him up in the middle of the night with a submarine story. Maupain pulls the same joke on Max, and while both are laughing over it the ship is rammed by another. Commotnon reigns supreme until the hole is patched up.

Doctor Salisbury's Pictures

(Fifteen Reels—State Rights)

DR. EDWARD A. SALISBURY, who recently returned from his trip through Central America and the Caribbean Sea, together with Rex Beach, gave a showing last week in New York of fifteen reels of pictures taken upon this interesting voyage in the yacht "Wisdom."

This week Dr. Salisbury leaves on an eight months' trip to Honolulu, China and Japan, to take more pictures of a similar character in connection with a natural-color process.

The Central and South American pictures are enlivened with much human, scenie and educational interest. The titles are supplied by Rex Beach, and in many instances are taken verbatim from the magazine articles now being published and bearing upon the voyage. Thrilling incidents in the trip show the capture of a huge crocodile which Mr. Beach, by the way, attempted to ride and was thrown some ten feet from the monster's back; natives capturing large turtles from the corals along the Central American coast; fishing for tarpon in the dangerous spillway below the Gatun Lake. The pictures taken through Central America, besides showing the wonderful plant and animal life of the tropics, give several remaining evidences of the romantic occupation of this country by the Spaniards. The ruins of a number of old time forts are shown, including Fort San Lorenzo, which was the rendezvous on several occasions of the buccaneer Morgan. Contrasted with this, we are shown the modern occupation and tillage of the country. There is a detailed and very interesting exhibition of the coffee industry from the planting of the bean to the final shipment. Similarly, one is shown of the sugar industry, depicting the planting of the cane through to the final shipment of the crude sugar to the Northern sugar refineries. Cocoa and banana plantations are also shown.

In his lecture Dr. Salisbury pointed out the remarkable opportunities for color photography, in portraying the mauy beautiful hues of the tropical foliage and also of the smaller animal life of the jungle. This Dr. Salisbury expects to accomplish upon his next trip.

Perhaps the most remarkable part of the pictures is devoted to a total eclipse of the sun. Not only is the eclipse clearly shown in its various stages, but at one point all the concentric lines of light about the sun are plainly visible. A number of scientists who were present expressed great gratification over this feature. On account of the intense heat of the tropics some of the best films taken were ruined. Throughout the trip the film was carried in specially made thermos cans.

"The War of the Tongs"

(Red Feather-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A CAST of Chinese people lend novelty to "The War of the Tongs," but little else save a handful of accidental laughs. The picture is hardly worthy of serious comment when its contents are considered. You may expect a few healthy fights from the title, but the few flashes of "combat" that you get resemble some new-fangled dance more than anything else. The people of the cast work artificially in every scene, and even when they come to an intended big moment they fail utterly to be convincing. Not one of the Chinamen has a face capable of expressing anything but a blank.

The story, which was written and directed by a countryman of the players, is elemental in conception and suffered somewhat by being drawn out. The settings, exteriors and photography are acceptable. As yet we are still wondering why the producers saw fit to write about seventy-five per cent. of the subtitles in Chinese before flashing them in English. It seems a mighty poor way to go after realism. When it comes to the spoken inserts, they have been written in a very flowery style that fails to give the impression of having been uttered by the blank-faced Chinamen.

In fact, the saving grace of "The War of the Tongs" is its advertising possibilities. An all Chinese cast may attract the curious public and show its value in dollars and cents for the day or the week, but the reputation of the theatre will be jeopardized afterwards.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

In America Wong Wing loves his employer's daughter, Suey Lee. A wealthy Tong leader, Ching Ting, desires her hand, but the father of the girl favors Wing and gives him a few days in which to raise a thousand dollars to prove his ability to support the girl as his wife. Wing attempts to add to his savings by gambling in Ting's establishment, but loses all owing to foul play. He accuses Ting, and this gentleman calls a meeting of his Tong to present his grievance. Members are chosen to kill Wing, but fail, being killed themselves. Later, Suey's father is commissioned to do the deed, but he is also shot by Wing's band. After this Ting gets a change of heart and decides that he will no longer stand between the lovers.

"Modern Mother Goose"

(Lea-Bel—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THIS juvenile picture was made by the Fort Dearborn Photoplays Company, a producing concern that is specializing in children's films. The world rights have been purchased by the Lea-Bel Company of Chicago. The film had its initial public showing under the auspices of a charitable institution at the Strand Theatre, Chicago, on Saturday afternoon, January 27. The big Wabash Avenue playhouse was jammed to the doors, at least three-quarters of the audience being youngsters.

With the kids the picture was a veritable knock-out. Each storied character that appeared on the screen was greeted with tremendous applause. When the children on the screen danced, more than half the audience sang "London Bridge Is Falling Down." In the face of this actual tryout before an audience of young persons, there can be no doubt that "Modern Mother Goose" is the sort of photoplay that children like.

The cast is composed entirely of well-trained, well-directed children. The plot is an ingenious combination of all the better-known nursery jingles. There is a real suspense element, and genuine continuity throughout. The settings and locations are always tasteful, and occasionally elaborate. The photography rarely reaches a high standard of excellence, but is always passable.

The action and acting will be enough to entertain adults who are greatly interested in children. The picture is, of course, primarily intended for children's matinees and performances where children predominate. At any such occasions the film will probably be a pronounced success.

The reception accorded this film augurs well for the modernization and picturization of other homely nursery rhymes which have never failed in their offices as entertainers of the younger element.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR BUSY EXHIBITORS

General Film Service

"The Sidetracked Sleeper." (Kalem. Episode of "Hazards of Helen." One reel. Drama.)—All the details of this episode are in keeping with its predecessors and the ever daring Helen Gibson adds still another thrill to her already long string. The whole film contains action of a clean cut nature; there is not one inch of padding but countless yards of thrills. The photography is good, and clearly represents midnight, dawn, and daylight. The sleeper, with the superintendent's sick wife aboard is side tracked so that a doctor may be summoned to attend her, her conditon having become worse. The Superintendent (George Routh) having been informed, rushes to meet her on a special. At this stage of the game, the careless setting out of freight cars starts the runaway of two on the track where the sleeper is lying. Helen, the operator, is notified and after a record breaking auto run, beats the derelicts to a switch and swings them onto the main track on which the Superintendent's special is speeding. Another thrill is furnished as Helen in her auto overtakes the freight cars again and mounts one of them and applies the brakes just in the nick of time to prevent a head on collision. Every audience will welcome this picture.

"Ghost Hounds." (Kalem. One reel. Comedy.)—The merry capers cut by three crooks disguised as ghosts and under such a disguise being perfectly safe in a so-called haunted house furnish fun galore. Silas Shakaleg, sheriff, jailer, dog catcher and judge of Mushroom Manor is ably represented by Henry Murdock. By the simple process of swapping hat or helmet with the word "Judge," "Sheriff," "Dogcatcher" he assumes either of the offices he is filling. Many amusing situations arise and the gyrations of Ham and Bud are plentiful and varied. The originator of this film has certainly struck a new and thoroughly wholesome chord in comedy. This reel will be well received wherever Ham and Bud have made their debut.

"Model Janitor." (Kalem. One reel. Comedy.)—This is another of the Ham and Bud farcical output, featuring Henry Murdock and Ethel Teare. As Pop Debris, the sculptor, Murdock extracts every conceivable bit of humor from his "sculpting sculps." Of course Ham and Bud are the janitors and having nothing to do that can't be done just as well next week indulge in a game of hide and seek until Murdock enlists the services of Ham to pose as an Indian in a pose that bears a striking resemblance to Diana of old. He would have made good but the posing on one foot was too strenuous a task, so in the sculptor's absence he "sculpts" on his own account, making the figure stand on two feet. Ructions follow and fun and mixups are rife. It is really one of the best Ham and Bud pictures up to date and cannot fail to produce paroxysms of mirth and laughter.

"The Trap." (Kalem. Episode of "Grant, Police Reporter" Series. One reel. Drama.)—Some entirely new angles are introduced in this interesting and exciting picture, one in particular being the "planting" of a fake I. O. U. in the sweatband of a police lieutenant's cap when the latter is lured into a street fight. This document very nearly causes the downfall of Lt. Brandon (Harry Gordon) and the arrested gambler Jack Mulhall (Robert Ellis) would have discredited the lieutenant, and he was preparing to spring a still further coup when Grant, the police reporter from the cover of a dumbwaiter shaft hears the plot being formulated. Grant, however, does not have an opportunity to warn Brandon, for being overheard in his hiding place he is hurled to the basement of the building and rendered unconscious. Here he is discovered by the police lieutenant's daughter Myrta (Ollie Kirkby) and now matters move lively enough for anybody, and in one of the most thrilling climaxes of the whole series Grant saves Myrta from bodily injury, saves the lieutenant's good name and brings the gangsters to justice—and all this in one reel.

Mutual Program

"Jerry's Big Raid." (Cub. One reel. Released Thurs., Feb. 8.)—This is one of George Ovey's best, and is filled with comedy situations of a rare type. George Ovey as Jerry joins a motion picture troupe as a "light" comedian, but the majority of his stunts are not light in character. He, as a comedy detective, is mistaken for the real article by a band of crooks, is blackjacked and thrown into a deserted room, but happily escapes and causes the arrest of the thieves. But what happened to Jerry is not a marker to the punishment meted out to the moving picture company's uniformed cop, whom Jerry fails to recognize in the melee, and who is most brutally beaten by Jerry for "impersonating a cop." This is a good picture, full of life and should prove most acceptable wherever Jerry has once made his appearance.

"Winged Diamonds." (Kalem. Episode of "Grant, Police Reporter." One reel.)—In the daring displayed by George Larkin, and the interesting and compact story by Robert Welles Ritchie, this episode is not a whit behind the preceding ones. A clever scheme whereby valuable jewels are stolen by a maid (Ollie Kirkby) in the home of a wealthy woman, and dispatched to a "fence" by means of homing pigeons, forms the plot. One of the pigeons going astray, enters the cage where a young boy keeps several birds, and when a ring is discovered around its neck the police are notified. Grant eventually clears up the mystery, meanwhile swinging high over space and "trolleying" from one house to another on a wire, making a hair-raising jump from a high building to another roof and doing other daring stunts. The use of a micaphone by the maid in "listening" to the combination of a safe she is opening, is decidedly novel.

Reel Life, No. 39. (Gaumont.) One of the most interesting things in this reel is "Autos With X-Rays, in France." An ambulance furnished with this precious aid is in operation. In a few minutes the X-Ray table with all the necessary equipment is removed from the auto to the house or tent and set up. Without removing him from the stretcher, the patient is placed upon the table. Electricity is supplied from auto ambulance and the wound is photographed. A close view shows the wound, and a diagram explains that the X-Ray has located the projectile. "Butterflies from the Tropics" is another instructive part of this reel. "What's a butterfly at best? 'Tis but a catapillar dressed." How beautifully they wear their clothes is explained and how they are used for decorating plaques, and by florists to make their plants and bouquets look more natural. A curious specimen is called the California moth. The cost of a butterfly is sometimes as high as $75. "Salt." Extracting this useful article from sea water is shown in all its details down to putting it in canvas bags ready for the kitchen. A real hula hula dance by Hawaii girls, at Waikikie Beach, Honolulu, should discourage all imitators of these fantastic gyrations.

"Tours Around the World, No. 15." (Gaumont. Tues., Feb. 13. One reel.)—This reel is intensely interesting and highly educational, opening with a remarkably clear view of Mont St. Michel, a granite islet on the western coast of France, which has often been alluded to as the "eighth wonder of the world." With a population of about 250 souls, the isle is the mecca of sightseers, the chief object of interest being the Abbey, an imposing, stately pile set atop a granite eminence, which legend says was the home of the mysterious Druids. Following this are shown scenes around Lake Iseo in northern Italy, the lake deriving its name from the Goddess Isis, and is a beautiful body of water nestling among the foothills of the Alps. Thence the tourist is escorted to Lovere, a picturesque hamlet whose buildings mark distinctly the difference between the light Swiss and the heavy Italian styles of architecture, and on to Predore, a romantic vilage, where the picture shows the verdant mountain side. Morocco of yesterday, an encampment of tents habited by Bedouins and Arabs is compared with the Morocco of today—the town of Casablanca being pictured to make the comparison. In the latter the natives are seen fraternizing with Europeans, and there is a distinct air of progress in all the surroundings. It is a picture admirably suited for Sunday showing.

"Reel Life, No. 41." (Gaumont. Sun., Feb. 11. One reel.)—"Queer Fish with Shells" is the title of the opening picture of this reel and it deals with the habits, characteristics and uses of various shell-bearing fish—the vari-colored littorina, which seeks seclusion in seaweed or on rocks of a similar hue as its shell; the purple fish from which the ancients procured their purple dye; the limpet and the haliotis, or "ears of the sea," the shell of which is used in the manufacture of mother of pearl. Then follows the "Diary of An Egg," whose original mission was to "feed America first," but whose aim and ambition was changed to "bleed America first." After its market manipulation by the cold storage magnate and the speculator. Sanitation of the mouth, and sanitary drinking fountains, individual sanitary drinking cups occupy a portion of this film, too, which is concluded with an interesting episode, with the caption, "Hypnotizing an Alligator," the practitioner being forewarned to select an alligator with a small mouth. To awaken the "subject," its stomach is tickled and the alligator promptly responds.

"Shorty Joins the Secret Service." (Monogram. Mon., Feb. 5. Two reels.)—After his brief experiences in college Shorty returns to the Arrowhead ranch, and is cordially greeted by his former cowboy friends, but Anita Kellar, the clever U. S. secret service agent, being detailed on a knotty problem of mail-box robberies, prevails upon her chief to detail Shorty as her aid. To say that action follows, with many a thrill, is putting it mildly, for the mail-box robbers have "pull" and this, combined with unique cunning, results in many hazardous escapades for the pair. They are waylaid, trapped and committed to a private asylum for the insane on a phony order—they are chloroformed, blackjacked and otherwise overcome, but in the end Shorty comes out victorious. The photography in this picture is clear cut and the exteriors are well selected and executed. Needless to add, Shorty and Anita both cover themselves with glory; the several inmates of the insane asylum when out exercising in the asylum grounds cut some queer capers, but none that should be unexpected from people in their mental state. It is a good picture and a fitting addition to the "Shortys" that have preceded it.

"The Musical Marvel." (Vogue. Sun., Feb. 11. Two reels.)—This picture extravagance was directed by Robin Williamson and features Ben Turpin. If shooting up a saloon dive several times by an alleged bad man, who makes all the habitues of the place run helter-skelter to cover is comedy, then this film is a comedy masterpiece, the only wonder being that somebody does not get hurt in the promiscuous shooting. The bad man is evidently stirred to desperate deeds by lively music and lulled to displays of tenderness by the "sob stuff" on the ivories. The musical marvel who plays ten or a dozen musical instruments simultaneously and at breakneck speed, still managing to gulp down large beakers of cooling lager, without letting up on the music, is prevailed upon to visit New York to show his skill. His first rehearsal wrecks the music hall and puts an end to his chances of distinguishing himself in the Metropolis. Slapstick stunts of the wildest kind mark every foot of the film, and there's no cessation of the activity from beginning to end of the reel.

"A Circus Cyclone." (Vogue. Two reels. Sun., Jan. 28.)—The circus atmosphere injected into this release is interesting, and many of the individual incidents are richly humorous. The comedy is too disconnected and forced, however, to give the picture a rating above the average. Paddy McQuire and Ben Turpin are the featured principals. A feud between the owner of a circus side-show and the manager of the show causes much bitterness among the performers. There are mallet battles, chases, and brawls of every variety. A thin plot trickles through the fisticuffs, but it is too unimportant to be set down.

"Lonesome Luke, Lawyer." (Rolin.)—The greater part of this comedy is laid in a court room, where opportunities innumerable are offered the Rolin comedy organization for staging a burlesque trial scene. The judge, the jury, the court attendants, and last but not least the attorneys present such comical appearances that the spectator will indeed be laughing every minute of the time. Harold Lloyd is seen as the attorney whose client is old and ugly and he gets all the worst of it because the opposing party is prettiness personified by charming Bebe Daniels. This is decidedly the best of the recent Luke comedies.

"Play Day in the South." (Florence Rose Fashions. No. 18.)—This number of the series shows headgear for southern climes and makes a very desirable release with its pretty millinery and still more pretty girls. A series of scenic views of great beauty entitled "Picturesque Algeria" concludes the reel.

"Paper—How It Is Made." (Pathe.)—This shows the various processes that wood goes through until it is no longer wood but paper. A most fascinating industrial. An International "Krazy Kat" cartoon by Herriman entitled

"Throwing the Bull" has a number of comical episodes but is too long and contains such amateurish work as to almost spoil the effect.

Metro

"Winning an Heiress." (Rolma, Feb. 12, 1 reel).—Ralph Hertz in fanciful slapstick comedy supposed to be a bad dream, with no attempt at a real plot, may amuse some, but is rather silly that many, and yet not fast enough to be in the utterly ridiculous class which makes you laugh at nothing. It classes with the average single-reel attempt at slapstick.

"The Pest." (Metro-Drew. Jan. 29.)—Mr. and Mrs. Drew surely get more clean fun out of life than is their rightful share. This week we laugh with them at the "nerve" of Henry's wife's brother, a young chap who is very efficient at everything but work. That he spurns, and there seems no chance of getting rid of this "pest," who appropriates to himself everything in the house from Henry's green tie to the family "car," until Henry thinks of an army officer friend. This story will convince you there are times when conscription is justified, and best for the one conscripted.

"Blackmail." (Drew Comedy. One reel, Feb. 5.)—The jealous wife is the theme of this really funny farce, in which the ever good-natured Henry is a lawyer with many lady clients of whom his wife has suspicions. Finally he receives anonymous accusations threatening to tell all the writer knows if he shall not deposit a sum of money in a certain spot. He deposits a fake package and detectives arrest—his wife.

Christie Comedies

"Black Hands and Soapsuds." (Mon., Jan. 15.)—A fairly diverting burlesque staged in a massage parlor where the head rubber and the chief engineer are rivals for the hand of the cashier. Various complications are introduced owing to the engineer's neglect of his furnace, although there seem to be possibilities resulting from many of the situations that have been overlooked in the producing. A scramble and a chase bring the reel to a close. Billie Rhodes, Harry Ham, Eddie Barry, George French and Harry Rattenberry are the principals. William Wing is the author, while Christie produced.

"Her Friend the Chauffeur." (Mon., Jan. 22.)—The boy and the girl refuse to take the advice of their respective fathers and agree to wed, having never seen each other. So the old gentlemen devise a scheme whereby the boy is turned out of his home to secure a job as chauffeur to the girl. Then the romance starts of itself. An entirely pleasing little comedy, quite without tricks or gags, but getting across because of the pleasing work of the two leads. Betty Compson and Neal Burns head the cast, while in support appear George French, Harry Rattenberry and Frank O'Neal. Christie directed from a scenario by Clyde Campbell.

Universal Program

"Down Went the Key." (Nestor. Mon., Feb. 19.)—This only measures up as fair along side the weekly comedy that the Nestor Company has been turning out of recent date. However, it has a number of good laughs in it concerning as it does the jealous husband who thinks his wife is flirting with the artist across the way when in reality she is only arranging for the purchase of a picture. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts are the principals.

"After the Balled Up Ball." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Feb. 21.)—Phil Dunham does the drunk in this picture and succeeds fairly well in making it funny with a number of mildly humorous gags. The mixup staged in the hotel rooms might have been better, although here too, there is some humor evident. A house-top chase closes the picture in which Dunham is supposed to be the chased—but another man has been substituted and the substitution is quite obvious.

"The Heart of Mary Ann." (Victor. Thurs. Feb. 22.)—Written, directed and largely enacted by Ruth Stonehouse this picture presents a homely little comedy that amuses in places, but never shows brilliancy. Mary Ann goes from house to house in the "wee sma' hours" and collects the milk from every step, taking it to her milk station and giving it away to the poor. The plan succeeds until the neighbors awake and then the philanthropy ends.

"A Bare Living." (Victor. Fri., Feb. 23.)—This comedy in which husband and wife decide to practice the "back to nature" stunt to economize is rather flat on the whole and has very few laughs in it. Ralph McComas, Eileen Sedwick and Milton Sims are the principals.

"The Comeback." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Feb. 24.)—In a Western town that is on its last legs the few old "hangers on" fleece a tenderfoot who has visions of locating a mine. Coming back a while later the "hangers on" are taken in by the stranger who is no longer a tenderfoot as he succeeds in selling them barren land, telling them there's gold on it. This is taken from a story by Charles Van Loan and abounds in atmosphere while the interest is well maintained.

"Rosie's Rancho." (Joker. Sat., Feb. 24.)—The Joker aggregation has staged this comedy on a ranch and everything is burlesqued from the cowpuncher up. William Franey, Gale Henry and the usual Joker supporting cast appears to excellent advantage in this.

"Avarice." (Imp. Fri., Feb. 9.)—That "the love of money is the root of all evil" was never so strongly emphasized as in this character study by E. M. Ingleton. Claire McDowell is featured as an old woman who has no friends due to her miserliness. Death comes to claim her in the end. This is rather a disagreeable release on the whole. It has not been produced well and the allegorical death scenes are poorly done.

"The High Cost of Starving." (Victor. Fri., Feb. 9.)—Captain Leslie Peacock has tossed out a bundle of nice laughs in this comedy and that, too, without verging upon the vulgar or indelicate, which is indeed a feat in these days of pastry pasting. A bewhiskered gent convinces the young bride of the necessity of practicing vegetarianism and at the same time contributing cash to the propaganda. She makes hubby do both until near-starvation is the common condition in the household. Fortunate discovery that the cat is not to be fed vegetables aids hubby until hungry servants get wise and eat pussy's meat themselves, showing him the bones with the statement that the feline ate in the kitchen! He has a bright thought, though, and buys vegetarian wifie a dozen cats for a present. Only the fact that they all prove upon delivery to be of too tender age to eat anything but milk, brings about the schemer's confusion and nearly paralyzes the expectant servants too, who anticipate an increase in diet when the new pets arrive.

"The Outlaw and the Lady." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Feb. 10.)—Written by and featuring Harry Carey as an outlaw of the genial type who would rather be shot at than thought discourteous. Jack Richardson is the rich mine owner whose daughter goes astray in the hills through not being familiar with the rule for chauffeurs which says they must not "chauff" through rivers if they would keep going. She is rescued by the outlaw in flight and rides ahorse with him until sheriffed into a tight corner, where both are shot at until they decide to surrender. Later, she influences father to give her bandit his liberty and at breakfast in the marble mansion again, she sees visions of his heroic outline over the ham and eggs when she looks at the chair father occupies in the flesh. Louise Lovely plays the girl in riding breeches and coatless. She will be remembered long for that alone. A butler part is well handled by Tote Ducro, who was producing clown with a leading American circus for many years.

"Out for the Dough." (Joker. Sat., Feb. 10.)—One of William Beaudine's Joker comedies supplied by Jack Cunningham. William Franey enters as a tramp, but before he is through he assumes the role of a minister and journeys to town to be greeted by the reception committee. There is much humorous incidental business in this, chiefly between Franey and Gale Henry, both of whom appear at their best. Others are Milburn Moranti, Lillian Peacock and John Cook.

"When Thieves Fall Out." (Imp. Two reels. Sun., Feb. 11.)—A crook melodrama that will appeal to those who want plain, sensationalism and who care little for the plot's age or obviousness. Jack Harvey directed a cast featuring Sidney Bracey and Harry Benham. The picture presents old-fashioned action that is cluttered with some wild improbabilities, such as the operations of the two society crooks at a reception. The manner in which they extract necklaces and watches from their owners bespeaks of blindness and loss of feeling on the part of the victims.

"A Hasty Hazing." (Nestor. Mon., Feb. 12.)—Complications of the typical Nestor sort are presented in this reel when a newly married fellow is mistaken for a freshman by a bunch of ardent hazers and as a consequence all the practical jokes meant for the latter are vented on the former. The Nestor company has done this several times before, but it bears repetition when done so well. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts and Harry Nolan are the leads. Lyons and Moran wrote the story.

"The Girl Reporter's Scoop." (Imp. Two reels. Wed., Feb. 14.)—Written and produced by Fred Kelsey, this two-reeler offers a quick moving detective drama that interests every minute of the way. It depicts the manner in which a girl reporter succeeded in bringing a band of robbers to justice. Irene Hunt, E. P. Evers and Roy Stewart are the leads.

"The Losing Winner." (Victor. Two reels. Thurs., Feb. 15.)—The action of this picture is neither dramatic nor humorous and as so much of it is padding that it aggravates considerably instead of entertaining. Carter De Haven's clownish stunts hardly get over at any time and the jumbled character of the story doesn't help him out much. He is supported by Flora De Haven, M. K. Wilson, Eileen Sedgwick and Jessie Arnold.

"The Fourth Witness." (Laemmle. Two reels. Fri., Feb. 16.)—A murder mystery picture written by Harvey Gates that has a strong vein of suspense which, however, is not properly balanced when the climax is reached. This part of the picture falls rather flat and leaves the spectator in rather a disappointed mood. Charles Mailes, Louise Lovely, Lee Hill and Malcolm Blevins are the leads.

"Brave Little Waldo." (L-Ko. Fri., Feb. 16.)—Fatty Voss acting effeminate and causing an entire ranch of cowboys to assume like ways is a pretty funny though not exactly tasteful sight. There are some good comedy surprises in the reel which should amuse. All the characters go over a cliff for the usual L-Ko ending.

"John Osborn's Triumph." (Big U. Two reels. Sat., Feb. 17.)—There is much that is threadbare in the theme of this story, but enough that is new to make it worth while. David Merrill and John Osborn are rivals in Wall Street and by unscrupulous methods Osborn is made bankrupt. He retires to a small town, taking his daughter Stella with him. There Merrill follows and threatens to attach the property unless Stella is forced to marry him. Osborn is paralyzed by this persecution and has been given up for dead when a bolt of lightning revives him and he points out a hiding place where there is more than enough money to meet the note. The cast consists of Murdock McQuarrie, Edna Payne, Arthur Moon, Albert McQuarrie and William Bruntin.

"Mule Mates." (Joker. Sat., Feb. 17.)—This Joker is notable for the presence of Fred Woodward in the cast, who meanders about dressed up as a mule. The mule's expression gets a laugh in practically every scene. In addition, Jack Cunningham, the author, has supplied William Franey, Gale Henry and the usual supporting cast with enough business to keep them going for the full reel. Decidedly the most novel of the recent Jokers and so funny as to warrant a good position on the bill of any theatre.

Rothacker Films

"Ranch Life in the Big Horn Mountains." (Rothacker Film.)—To be released during February. Synopsis—For this film scenes were taken in Wyoming at the famous IXL and Eaton Bros.' Ranch. It shows vacationists arriving by stage, telephoto view of the ranch in the distance nestling among the mountains, exciting "broncho busting" scenes and horseback rides over the mountain trails, trout fishing, swimming and outdoor sports in the heart of the mountains, and picturesque vistas of Rocky Mountain scenery. These pictures are all tinted and toned, giving dual-tone and triple-tone effects, and every scene is said to have extraordinary photographic value.

STAR CARBONS
Made in France
The carbons you have been looking for

The following letter was recently received from a theatre using Star Carbons:—

"Carbons received from you work fine and wish you would send by express 50—5/8 x 12 plain cored.
"As soon as I get my theatre started at Ahoskie I will have to have some more of the same kind."

The following dealers stock Star Carbons and you can obtain from them the carbons you have been looking for. Try them with a trial order.

Gentlemen:- Attention Mr. O. F. Spahr, Mgr.

I can frankly and truthfully state that the Motiographs we are using in our plant are giving very good satisfaction.

We are using Motiographs exclusively in all of our screen inspection work and we have had innumerable compliments from our customers upon the clear steady pictures we present.

You doubtless know that in selecting the equipment of our laboratory-studio, we spared neither time nor money in getting the very best regardless of price, so that our selection of Motiograph may, indeed, be considered a compliment to you.

Wishing you every success, we are

Very truly yours,

ROTHACKER FILM MFG. CO.

WRR-H

When the best is wanted the Motigraph is selected regardless of the initial cost.

Mr. W. E. Drummond, Mgr. of the Palace Theatre, Maryville, Tenn., says:

"You are certainly to be congratulated on furnishing such a machine as the Motiograph at a less price than your competitors. If exhibitors will buy Motiographs when they are in need of machines they will not only save money, but get machines that are equal, if not superior to any other machine on the market."

Mr. F. H. Richardson, the Projection Expert, says:

"The Motiograph is now a machine which I can conscientiously recommend to the serious consideration of motion picture theatre managers who are contemplating the purchase of new projection apparatus."

To you who are about ready to buy a projector it will be well for you to investigate the Motiograph.

HAVE REVOLUTIONIZED THE ENTIRE INDUSTRY

The Ideal Lower Carbon for Direct Current

Constructed with a hard core and metal coating, the "Hold-Ark" negative carbon permits the use of a smaller carbon in the lower holder—assures a permanent arc—gives longer life to the carbon—prevents wandering—produces a perfect crater—aids in securing a bright, flickerless light—and assists in many ways in eliminating projection troubles.

Everything for Theatre, Exchange and Studio

THE SLIDE INDUSTRY

THIS is one branch of the motion picture industry which deserves particular attention at this time. It is older than motion pictures and though superseded by them is still prominent in the promotion of the younger art.

During the past few years the quality of advertising slides has been deteriorating while the pictures have been getting better. Only last week I sat in a picture house and heard a fan next me, who was a regular attendant, exclaim and ask, "Who is that supposed to be?" It was a clear case of supposition and no mistake. The only way to clear up the mystery was by deciphering the indistinct caption under the picture. Though the audience would never know it this claimed that the blot on the screen was one of our most beautiful and famous favorites.

This is not a rare example of the way in which quantity slides are turned out, but yet with all this crudeness I can frankly say that the slide was passable when the price which was probably paid for it is considered. The slide manufacturers stand with their backs against the wall, many have given up producing for the picture industry and others will unless conditions change.

A LARGE feature was brought out some time ago on which open bids were asked on slides per thousand. Of three bids two called for slides at ten cents each and a third called for seven cents. No samples were requested—no question of quality was taken up. The contract was awarded to the firm offering them at seven cents. Thirty dollars per thousand was saved in cash, but what was sacrificed in quality will never be known. Is this good buying?

Now let us consider what these slides would have cost a large slide manufacturer to produce. The following is his personal statement of cost and comment on conditions:

"The costs given below are based on the cost of manufacturing one thousand slides. This schedule was prepared by a public accountant and certified to. Raw materials are purchased in large quantities in order to keep the costs down.

COST PER ONE THOUSAND SLIDES

Photographic plates 3¼ x 4	$20.30
Cover glass	5.00
Binding tape	.60
Mats	1.30
Labor making 1,000 slides	3.33
Art work in making original	2.50
Make negative and sample	.50
Art work coloring	11.00
Labor binding	2.50
Chemicals, color, etc	1.50
	$48.53

To which we must add 5% for breakage, waste, replacement, etc., which is unavoidable in this line of business. Which brings the total to $50.96

NOW we must take into consideration overhead expense; that is, rent, phone, office hire, stationery and other printed matter, advertising, salesmen, and a score of other incidental expenses, all of which amount to 40% of the cost of production and which must be added to your previous cost in order to obtain the correct total cost. Incidentally, I might add that these overhead expenses grow in the same proportion with the increase of business and the same ratio of overhead expense will apply whether the business is large or small. Adding 40% for overhead, or $20.40, we receive an actual cost on 1,000 slides of $70.36, which is actually $0.36 more than the average amount paid for slides today at the 7c price. Furthermore, this is figured on the cost of 1,000 slides from the same design and the same negative, whereas some concerns order at least two or three designs in the 1,000 order, thus bringing the cost up at least $5 more.

In taking the above figures into account, very cheap material is used; very little care or attention is given to the slides; the coloring is very limited and not as carefully put on as might be desired, and the whole slide has a "rush appearance," because so many thousand must be turned out each day to satisfy the "rush appetite" of the man who places the order. I know of one concern that lost $5,000 last year in doing this cheap work, and I know of smaller concerns that have gone into debt trying to hold their end up. The whole proposition simply resolves itself into one of two things; either a fair price of at least 10 cents per slide should be paid for good work, so that the slide makers can produce a slide that will be in keeping with the dignity of the feature it advertises or the slide makers had better devote their plants to other photographic purposes. The feature men are constantly preaching quality, but they do not practice what they preach when they order slides. I am speaking of them now as a whole. There are rare exceptions, but very rare indeed and sooner or later the desire to reduce the cost appeals to them stronger than the desire to furnish good slides."

THIS is a case for the exhibitor. He depends to some extent at least on his announcement slides to bring in patrons. If this forerunner of a picture is so poor that it causes ridicule the people who see it naturally think the coming picture must be of the same quality. $30 additional per thousand is not much money but it means a profit for the slide maker and a guarantee that the product turned over to the picture manufacturer and by him to the exhibitor will be at least creditable. In addition, the improvement should mean an increased revenue to the exhibitor—for good advertising is the only kind which pays.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Local 306 Elects Officers

AT a largely attended meeting held by Local 306, Moving Picture Machine Operators, of Greater New York, at Mansion Hall, 57 St. Marks place, on the evening of February 7, an election was held to fill the offices of those who were unable to serve out their full term. Having five offices to fill, the most important of which was that of secretary-treasurer, the members turned out in large numbers to support their choice of candidates. When the nominations were called for, the candidates for the office of vice-president were Simon Terr and Max Hollander. For secretary-treasurer: Jack Manning, A. I. Mackler and Sol Spevack. It nearly took my breath away when Brother Thomas Ross rose and placed in nomination the name of I. G. Sherman. After the bother was informed that I was only a visiting brother and not a member of Local 306 (having withdrawn from that local for the purpose of transferring my membership to Local 384, the name was withdrawn and peace and quiet again prevailed.) Three candidates were placed in the running for the office of recording secretary—Harry Sherman, Edward Stewart and Morris Rotker. The task of securing an executive board member appeared to be a somewhat difficult matter, several members being nominated, but when the weeding out process was finished (some of the candidates not being eligible and others not entitled to vote), it finally simmered down to five candidates—N. Feinberg, E. M. Tromba, Sol Abrams, Morris Barron and Thomas Ross. Three received the nomination for sergeant-at-arms—Moe Albert, Sam Citron and Sam Tilofsky. Nominations were then closed and the local went into the election of officers, Brothers H. Weinberger, George Langer and Joe Engel being appointed by the chair to act as counters and tellers. The final result was the election of the following members for the various offices: For vice-president, Simon Terr; secretary-treasurer, A. I. Mackler; recording secretary, Harry Sherman; executive board member, Nathan Feinberg; sergeant-at-arms, Sam Citron. The newly elected officers were then obligated by President George C. Edwards, and the general order of business again resumed. After a lengthy list of new propositions for membership had been read and passed upon the local was called upon to issue instructions to their delegates to the I. A. Convention, and after several speeches had been made and the delegates placed themselves on record as favoring any and all legislation which would benefit the condition of the entire craft, and particularly those in the greater city, the meeting was adjourned, the hour being rather late—or early, whichever you choose, the hands of my watch pointing to the hour of 7:45 A.M. In the early hours of the morning an argument took place which at one time gave promise of becoming serious: the case of a member who made an appeal to the I. A. from the decision of his local, and to one on the outside looking in there did not seem to be any grounds for the appeal to have ever been made. The flexibility and different interpretations with which the constitution and by-laws can be juggled by "book" members is a joke, and many of the members seem to take it as such. The case was finally tabled and hostilities called off without loss of life. To the best of my knowledge, this was one of the most orderly elections the above local has ever held, and the boys are learning that the meetings are held for business purposes and not pleasure, and as soon as this fact can be further impressed upon them there is no doubt but the local will succeed in greater measure in making this one of the strongest and most powerful locals in the International Alliance. The newly elected officers have the congratulations and best wishes of this department on their election to serve the organization, and as the saying has it, "By their deeds ye shall know them." This should instill them with a spirit of service of which they may be proud and which will prove to their supporters that they chose wisely and well. Having attended the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held at the McAlpin Hotel in the morning and afternoon, where the standardization of motion picture devices was discussed, and then, at the request of several of the brothers, attending the meeting of the local, you can believe me when I say: It was some strenuous day. The open meeting campaign given by this local during the month of December of last year has been the means of increasing the membership to a great degree, several new members being obligated at this and each preceding meeting. May the good work continue and the things we hope for at the convention be granted, so that the motion picture operator will come into his own.

Calehuff Forces Busy in Philadelphia

FROM the new offices at 1233 Vine street, Philadelphia, the Calehuff Supply Company reports one of the busiest seasons of its career. Among the recent contracts worth boasting about is one by which all the equipment of the new Strand theatre was supplied by Calehuff. This includes two Simplex machines with motor attachments, 75 Fort Wayne generator sets, a spot light, arc controllers, a Caille ticket chopper and all minor supplies. The Rembusch Crystal Gold Fibre Screen at the Strand was also supplied by the Calehuff Company.

Other recent contracts closed by Calehuff follow: The Poplar theatre, two Power's 6B machines, a Rembusch Crystal Gold Fibre Screen; Colonial theatre, Newport News, a Rembusch Crystal Gold Fibre Screen, Power's 6B Caille ticket chopper, and minor equipment; the Bluebird of Richmond, Va., a Rembusch screen.

T. B. Bloomfield, representing the Calehuff Company, has just returned from a trip through Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina and Virginia.

Motiograph Strong in Canton

Within the last week the following Motiograph machines have been installed in Canton city alone: Alhambra, two; Orpheum, two; Lyceum, two, and Verdi, one. Sales were made through Motion Picture Equipment and Supply Co., L. A. Hoberdier, manager, 208 Market avenue S, Canton.

Here Comes the Bride

THE ranks of the benedicts are to be further augmented when Robert Saunders, nephew of Judge Leon Saunders, and one of the most ardent workers in Local 306, of which he has been a member from its inception, leads to the matrimonial altar the charming Miss Sylvia Zinkowetsky, daughter of a well-known milliner of Manhattan.

The happy even will take place at Beethoven Hall, East Fifth street, New York City, and after a short honeymoon the happy pair will take up their residence in the Bronx, where the bridegroom will be heartily welcomed by the democratic organizations and others. In the words of the late David B. Hill, "Bob's a democrat."

The editor of this department joins the members of Local 306 in extending congratulations, and sincerely hopes that all their troubles will be "little ones."

Fuses Blow

W. A. Brown, Pottsville, Pa., writes: "I would be very much obliged to you if you would give me an answer to the following, over which a number of operators have been arguing: While running the show the fuses blow. You put in heavier ones; they blow again. Your lamp is O.K., and no ground in the rheostat. What would you do, and what do you think the cause would be?"

Answer: I should think under these conditions that the voltage should be tested with a test lamp, as the most probable thing would be a sudden rise in the line voltage. It might be possible, though, that two or more of the coils of the rheostat have sagged so that they touch each other, which would cut out a portion of those two coils, or in some cases half of the resistance in the entire rheostat. There might be some local condition that would set up the above trouble, but I hardly think so, and the two causes named are the things which appear to me as being responsible for your trouble.

Action of the Intermittent

Portsmouth, N. H., writes: "Have several catalogues of the leading projection machine manufacturers, and note that each of them makes claims that the speed of their intermittent is so and such. They seem to think that the faster the speed of the intermittent movement the better the picture projected will be. Is this so, and if it is will you kindly explain?"

Answer : It is quite true, the speed of the intermittent movement is of great importance. An explanation of the proposition will take up some space, but here goes: When the machine is running at normal speed, or 60 turns per minute, that means that 60 feet of film is passing the aperture every minute, or, in other words, 16 pictures are being shown per second, or one foot of film. On that foot of film there are exactly 16 photographs, each one of which must be pulled down by the intermittent movement, stopped at the aperture, exposed and moved on its way, giving place to the next succeeding picture. This entire operation must take place in just 1/16 of one second, or 16 times each second. This period of time is taken up by two separate and distinct operations, as follows: (1) The moving of the film down, which takes away one picture and brings the next into place, during which time the light is entirely shut off from the screen by the revolving shutter; (2) the exposing of the picture to the light and its projection to the screen, during the time the lens is uncovered by the shutter. You see, you have two operations to perform, and a given length of time in which to perform them, that is, 1/16 of a second. If the movement of the intermittent is a slow one and the film completes its movement, say, in half that time, or 1/32 of one second, then you will have 1/32 of one second during which the picture will be exposed to the light and projected to the screen. You will, therefore, have one-half of the total 1/16 of a second for the actual projection of the picture, and an equal space of time for the movement of the film (one-half the time the picture will be on the screen; the other half the screen will be dark). This means, taken altogether, that with such an intermittent movement it is necessary for the shutter to cut 50 per cent. of the light with a single blade.

If we had an intermittent movement so fast that the movement of the film was to take place in, say, 1/64 of one second, we then would have one-fourth of the total time in changing the film and three-fourths of the time in which to project it, which would give 75 per cent. of light and 25 per cent. of darkness, but for the fact that it would be necessary to add a flicker blade to the shutter in order to eliminate the operator's bugaboo—flicker. The speed of the intermittent is, from a mechanical standpoint, almost without limit, but the faster the speed the greater must be the tension of the tension springs, and there will be added strain on the films, for which the film stock will not sand. The greater the speed of the machine, you know, the greater the strain upon the film, and vice versa. I trust you will have no difficulty in understanding this. I have tried to make it as clear as possible.

Big Pictures—Little Light

Olean, N. Y., writes: "Wish you would tell me what to do to improve my light, as I am not able to make it bright enough. It shows very dark upon the screen. Use 110 volt A. C. through an inductor. Throw is about 90 feet and size of picture 24 x 18 feet. Thanking you in advance for any help you can give me, and with best wishes for a continuation of your success, I am respectfully yours."

Answer: Are you surprised that your light is not bright enough? What can your manager be thinking of to show such an unusually large picture? To properly illuminate a picture of that size it would be necessary to use between 80 and 90 amperes on A. C., and of course the inductor would not permit that. There are only two ways that I know of to overcome your trouble: either reduce the size of your picture or increase the amperage. The cheapest way would be to cut down on the size of the picture. At that distance a picture between 16 and 18 feet in width is plenty large enough, and much more satisfying to those who pay their good money into the box office with the expectation of receiving value when they get on the inside. Any one of the various types of current changing devices for changing A. C. into D. C. would be a good investment, for the saving effected would soon pay for its installation. I am thankful for your kind words, but as far as being successful is concerned there are some who disagree with you, and if hard work can bring about success I'll not give up hope.

Setting Edison Shutter

James Mendel, Canada, writes: "Would you please give me instruction as to the setting of a three-wing shutter on the Edison Model B machine, so as to eliminate all flicker. We boys in Canada like the way in which you are conducting the department, and you should have the support of every union member for the stand you take in all matters regarding the oppression of the operator by the supposed-to-be manager."

Answer: In the first place, brother, it is impossible to set a shutter so as to eliminate flicker. The shutter has nothing to do with flicker, but does have to do with what is known as "travel ghost," the white streaks or flashes up or down, as the case may be, from white objects in the picture, or letters of titles. The Edison Company gives these directions for the setting of the shutter on their type B machine:

"To properly set the revolving shutter, place the mechanism central on the body slides—that is, neither too far forward nor too far downward. Then set the solid blade (the widest blade) of the revolving shutter so that it covers entirely the opening in the picture gauge while the film is in motion."

Remember that it is the wide blade only that counts, and proceed as follows: Loosen the three clamp screws on the front of the shutter just sufficiently to enable you to turn the blade when the hub is held stationary. Place the film in the machine as usual and with the framing carriage in central position and the film in frame, turn the balance wheel so that the film travels as it ordinarily would, then set the wide blade so that it covers the lens while the film is in motion. The best way to do this would be to either look through the aperture, watch the intermittent sprocket, or else light the arc, leaving the dowser down, allowing the light to filter through on the film as soon as the fire shutter is raised. After the blade is set so that no movement of the film is visible through the lens, tighten up the clamp screws, and the job is finished. Should there be any perceptible streaks still showing, up or down, loosen the screws again slightly and either turn the shutter toward you or away from you, as the case may be, until all streaks have disappeared, then again make tight, and you should have no further trouble. Flicker depends upon the speed in which you run your machine; if too slow this flicker is most objectionable; if too fast, it is not so pronounced, but the projection is unsatisfying. In regard to your last sentence, I am indeed grateful that my Canadian brothers feel that I am of some small service to the operator. Whether I get the support of every "union member" is something else again. No matter what they think or what they feel, my heart is with them, and I will do anything in my power to further their interests.

More Light Troubles

Harry Freeman, New Castle, Pa., writes: "Am running a Simplex machine on a 50 foot throw. Two 7½ inch condensers, 60 cycle 110 volt A. C. current through a rheostat, the capacity of which is marked 25 amperes. My light shows up very bright for a few minutes, then gets very dim, and the picture seems to be out of focus. I have tried every possible way in setting carbons and yet cannot seem to get any better results. That is why I am writing you to see if you can offer any advice that will be of help to me. It surely is getting my goat."

Answer: I second the motion. It has my "chamois," too. The only suggestions that I can offer which may be a solution to your trouble are as follows: (1) Your wires are not sufficiently large enough to carry the current, which would cause them to heat up after a few minutes' use. It may be that the wires are also old and badly decomposed. Feel the wires after the machine has been running a few minutes, and if the wires are warm put in new ones, using wires not smaller than a number 8. (2) The rheostat passes more current when cold than it does after it has been in use long enough to get heated, therefore you will get more current when you first strike the arc than you will after the resistance heats up. It might be possible that the rheostat is very old and that a new one would help matters considerably. The out of focus effect is something that I cannot explain. There does not seem to be any reason for this. If it is right for a few minutes it should be all right all the time. Then, too, you might imagine that the picture gets out of focus when it really is not; this would be due to the dimming of the light and the traveling of the arc. Try out these suggestions and let me know the result. In the meantime I will investigate further and see if there is not some one who can give a more comprehensive answer.

Operators' Ball to Be Grand Affair

The sixth annual ball of Moving Picture Operators' Union (Local 224) is scheduled to take place at the old Masonic Temple, Washington, D. C., Friday, March 2 next. As the inauguration of President Wilson occurs at this time, it is expected a large number of out-of-town inaugural visitors will participate. Many novel features will be introduced, and there will be present several noted stars of screendom. The proceeds of the ball are to be applied to the creation of a much needed emergency fund. M. Morris is chairman of the ball committee, and B. A. Spellbring, secretary. Walter Bush is chairman of the publicity committee.

The following members of Local No. 1, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., were chosen to represent their local at the I. A. Convention to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, the week of February 25: H. L. Abbot, William Bass, T. F. Burke, J. F. Corrigan, W. S. Davis, S. Driscoll, James Maxwell, Sr., J. M. Meeker, W. E. Monroe, J. W. McDowell, T. J. McKenna, and J. Tierney. With a total of twelve delegates from this "old time" local, and the delegates from the other locals of the Greater City, which comprise Locals 4, 35 and 306, it is expected that much beneficial legislation will be put over at this convenion that will place the organized workers in the theatrical industry on a more solid foundation than ever before.

Get busy, brother secretaries, and send in the news. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will publish it.

Plans are under way for the Annual Ball to be given by the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union of St. Louis, Mo., Local 143 I. A. T. S. E., of which further announcement will be made in these columns.

Motion Picture Operators' Union, No. 61, of Canton, Ohio, held its annual meeting last week, and Frank Kling was elected president, and Fred Leister, secretary.

Break Condensers

Herbert Lawton, Connecticut, writes: "Have been having a great deal of trouble in breaking condensers, and my employer is putting up a stiff kick. I break on an average at least four condensers a week. Am very careful in starting the arc to see that no draught reaches them. Clean them every day, and as a last resort am coming to you for help. Do you think it is because they cool too quickly after pulling the arc? The breakage generally occurs just afterward.

Answer: The question of condenser breakage was something that had the nerve of every operator a few years ago, but since then there have been placed on the market various devices to stop condenser breakage. Among these devices is one known as the Preddy Condenser Mount, a sample of which has been sent to this department, and I feel that the claims of its inventor are justified. Surely, when you consider that you are breaking on an average four condensers a week, and taking into consideration the cost of the Preddy mount, it should be worth while taking a chance. There is a liberal guarantee with this device, and they can be procured either from Preddy direct or the Picture Theatre Equipment Company, 1604 Broadway, New York. It would be well for you to see that the ventilation of your lamp house is in perfect order, keeping the wire screen free from carbon dust. Also try and avoid opening the door of the lamp house immediately after shutting off the arc, and see that the fan does not blow directly on the lamp house. It is no doubt the sudden contraction of the condensers that causes them to break, and I think the above mentioned device will do the trick for you.

110 or 220 Volts

An operator in New York, who does not wish his name known, writes: "I am a constant reader of the News and its Projection Department, and am now coming to you to see if you can help me. I am operating a Power's 6A machine, taking the current from a three-wire system. What I want to know is this: Would it be better to use 110 volts or 220? Also, should a Ft. Wayne compensarc heat up on 220 volts when the switch is on the 40 ampere notch?"

Answer: If it were I, I should use the 220 volt supply, connecting the two outside wires to the compensarc, if the device is wound for that voltage. The lighting companies prefer the use of the higher voltage. The compensarc cannot be operated on 220 volts if it is wound for 110, or on 110 if it is wound for 220. Examine the name plate and find out the voltage it is wound for, then act accordingly. There should be no great degree of heat when operating this device on the 40 ampere notch unless it is being used at a higher voltage than it is wound for.

Rainbow

H. W., Omaha, Neb., writes: "I wish you would answer the following for me: I am projecting a picture whose width is about 9 feet, the throw approximately 48 feet, and am having trouble in getting a clear field. In the corners there are rainbow colors, which I can get out by moving the carbons closer to the condensers, but when I do this there is a dark spot in the center of the screen. Can you suggest anything to help me?"

Answer: The condition you menion is rather unusual, and the fault probably lies in the condensers. If you will try two 7½ inch condensers I think that your trouble will vanish. Before changing condensers move the lamp house forward and backward and note the effect; also note the effect with the two 7½s. If this does not give you the remedy, come again.

War Sends Compo Prices Upward

SHORTAGE of wood pulp caused by the increased demands for this commodity because of the European War, is causing an increase in the cost of motion picture production, as prices of Compo board, used in the making of practically all interior settings, has gone skyward. Originally wallboard was used, but this was found unsatisfactory as dampness or moist weather, caused a wrinkling between the slats of cedar. When Compo board was first introduced, the price was from twenty-three to twenty-five per cent. less than wallboard, but now it has increased to about the equivalent of wallboard, and if there is a further raise in price, studio purchasing departments say it will be necessary to return to the commodity formerly used.

Why Pay High Prices

for pictures and for projection apparatus unless you use a projection lens that enables you to get the full benefit of your investment?

No matter what your films cost, the quality of pictures your patrons see will not be any better than the quality of your projection lens.

That is why it pays to use a

Society of Motion Picture Engineers Plan General Meeting

A MEETING of the Board of Governors of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was held at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, on Wednesday, February 7, 1917. Those present were C. Francis Jenkins, H. B. Coles, H. J. Edwards, H. A. Campe and E. K. Gillett.

The meeting was called to discuss plans for the general meeting of the society to be held at Atlantic City on April 6 and 7. This meeting promises to be largely attended and should not only be interesting but instructive and beneficial to all present. Mr. Jenkins, president of the society, announced activity on the part of the various committees.

Application to join the National Fire Protection Association was ratified by the board. This will give the society a standing before this body and a right to present facts to the association which heretofore have not reached them in the proper form.

The committee on motion picture electrical devices also held a meeting in the hotel on the same day.

Members of the committee, including H. M. Wible, W. C. Kunzmann, H. A. Campe and Max Mayer were in attendance. The privilege of the meeting was also extended to H. J. Edwards, H. B. Coles, C. F. Jenkins, J. C. Moulton, Julian Speer, T. H. Shoepf, Mr. Luprinski, F. H. Richardson, I. G. Sherman and E. K. Gillett.

It was decided after discussion that the committee prepare a paper on "The Nature of Projection Current" for the Atlantic City meeting. This to be taken afterward in open discussion at the meeting, both the article and comments to be published for the benefit of the entire industry.

As the other committees of the society are also working on their various assignments, the Atlantic City meeting should be an assured success.

Schlesinger with Gold Fibre Screen

THE engagement of Leon Schlesinger as general manager of Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., has injected a very noticeable new life into the selling campaign of that company.

Mr. Schlesinger, the new general manager of the company, is a man particularly well fitted for the position which he now occupies, having had an unusually wide personal experience in the theatrical world. Starting with the Charles E. Blaney forces, in Philadelphia, Mr. Schlesinger followed the old-line theatrical business for a number of years before entering the motion picture field as an exhibitor. Because of his activities in and around Chicago, throughout the Middle West, in Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast, and in and around New York City, Mr. Schlesinger is personally known to scores of exhibitors who are now possible purchasers of Radium Gold Fibre screens and whom he is able to approach as a friend of long standing.

Model Lighting System in Rothacker Studio

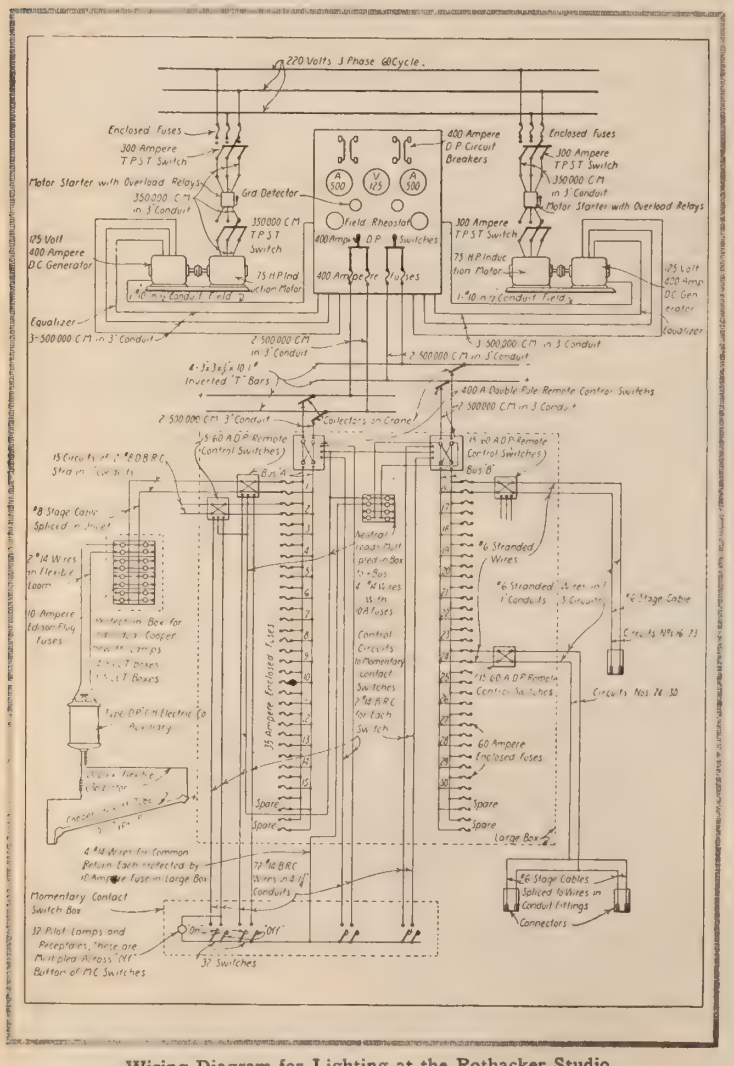
By J. Howard Sandidge

NO expense or effort has been spared to make the artificial lighting system in the Rothacker Studio a model installation with respect to efficiency of operation. Each detail of construction was carefully worked out to attain the maximum of utility with a minimum of complication. The final result is a studio equipment which gives complete flexibility of light effects, together with a method of handling and control of lights, so simple that anyone, even if without electrical knowledge, may operate it and obtain good results with very little practice.

The first radical departure from standard practice is the spanning of the entire width of the studio by a traveling crane supported by tracks on the side walls of the studio. All the overhead lights are supported from this structure instead of the ceiling of the studio, and may thus be traversed from set to set in one operation, giving an actual working area of 125x52 feet.

The crane differs from the ordinary crane seen in large machine shops, in that its two side girders are separated by nearly thirty feet, the whole forming a kind of moving platform. This width of structure permits a considerable latitude in the relative location of the overhead lights which may be moved readily from side to side of the crane whenever it is desired to photograph along the diagonal of the studio. Each one of the fifteen skylights of Cooper Hewitt lamps which furnish overhead light may be raised, lowered or adjusted in angle to the floor by a simple set of cranks and shafts. If it is desired to photograph directly down the length of the studio the overhead lights may be readily tipped sideways to provide the proper direction of light.

The use of the cranework as described above solves one of the hardest problems involved in studio lighting, that is, a simple and readily available source of current for floor lights without a mass of cables on the floor. In the Rothacker installation all floor lights are fed with current from above. From each girder eleven flexible stage cables with uniform plugs hang down far enough to be reached by a claw pole from the floor. Each cable has an automatic take-up device which permits its being pulled down for plugging into a floor stand, and thus provides enough slack cable for the stand to be moved over twenty feet along the floor into its proper position. After being used the cable again rises to its normal position, which is high enough from the floor for the cable plugs to clear the wings of the set when the crane is being traversed.



The heart of the whole system is in the small control panel (Fig. 1), which is located at the front of the set and supported rigidly from the crane structure. From this point, always convenient to the set being photographed, any overhead bank or any floor light may be lighted or extinguished by the working of small wall push buttons. The center of the panel is a sort of plan of the overhead lights, each push button being located on the panel just as its overhead bank is located on the crane, while the buttons along the side of the panel control the hanging cables for the side lights, and all arranged in the same order that the cables have on the crane girders. Two prominently located buttons which may be operated by one hand at the same time light and extinguish the entire equipment, one controlling all floor lights and the other all overhead lights. A glance at the board shows the equipment in use as each button is accompanied by a ruby tell-tale lamp which glows when current has been supplied to the bank it controls.

The arrangement of apparatus briefly described above offers many points of superiority over the usual systems of installation of studio lights, prominent among which are the following:

The entire overhead lighting equipment is moved from set to set in one operation, with a steady and vibrationless movement which does not injure the overhead lighting equipment.

There is no dangerous and unreliable set of collector wires strung from end to end of the studio, the current for both floor and overhead lights being fed into the crane from four rigid steel T bars permanently installed on the ceiling of the studio. This reduces the fire hazard materially.

There is no fixed switchboard with its accompanying ponderous switches and complicated operation which requires the constant attendance of an electrician. All control is in the small panel which follows the crane, and is always convenient to the cameraman. The electrician is relieved for duty on the studio floor and does not have to wait beside a switchboard for orders to throw "on" or "off" the lights. All this is done by automatic switches installed in a steel box on the crane, the push buttons on the control board carrying nothing but a small operating current for these switches.

There are no exposed current-carrying parts on the floor, and hence no danger to anyone from contact with these.

Finally, there are no floor cables, subject to constant wear and tear and a menace to the safety of actors and operators alike. The saving in time in not having to run and connect up floor cables for each set is enough to justify the system, if it had no other advantages.

A full description of the electrical features of the studio is given by the author, who acted as Consulting Engineer for the Rothaker Film Mfg. Co., in the Electrical Review issue of Jan. 6, 1917.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Through Criticisms Perfection Is Gained

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:

I have been silent for some time in the past—not sleeping—only napping.

I herewith inclose a letter for your most valuable MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which I hope you will find it possible to publish under "Motion Picture and the Music."

I note in some of your publications a mention of the Film Music Company. I claim the originality of music to the picture in roll form, for feature films, also inspiration music commonly called incidental music.

I am herewith inclosing letters of reference regarding my test of synchronization for the Fox Film production, and I hope at some future date to be in the world of films and music in New York.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

GENTLEMEN:

Your kind indulgence and forbearance if I echo Carrie Hetherington's sentiments in her article of October 14, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, regarding musical programs for the pictures. Many of these are absolutely ridiculous for two reasons: first, I do not think it necessary to change music every time a man runs up and down stairs, comparatively speaking.

The word synchronization, as I understand it, means to adapt correct music to the scene. Can we find any suggestions of adaptation in the music selected for "God's Country and a Woman" in the scene setting, "Sympathy," by Friml. Where is there a scrap in this entire production in which this music synchronizes, yet it is adapted as a theme setting. Likewise, "Oh, That We Two Were Maying!" in the "Comeback" in the musical suggestion cue sheet which comes with the Metro Picture Program. "Oh, That We Two Were Maying!" is also selected for theme. The scenes of the picture are mostly laid in the Western sphere—woods and snow—and this beautiful sympathetic theme is adapted to a scene of this kind. Would you not think that this beautiful theme would be better adapted to the Daisy scene in "A Flower of Faith?"

I recently played "Less Than the Dust." I hope you will bear with my drastic and serious criticism on this musical setting, published by one of the best-known musical publishers in the world.

Kindly note No. 1, very well suited, less the picking up of several measures throughout the entire musical production, that chords are ridiculous.

I also note that Edward J. Howe claims the composition. Would it not be well to give the composers of such a beautiful Serenade by Drdla, also 36 "T," page 132, credit? A composition, also dance Parisian by Lee S. Roberts, changing from the original key to a minor key in his attempt at a composition. Where does our Mr. Howe get the idea of a thunderstorm in this picture when the sea is evidently at peace with itself judging from the scene of playing games aboard ship en route? That is easily the case in calm sea aboard ship.

Such musical setting as this appears rather foreign, don't you think, to each other—one detracting from the other.

Page 150, No. 40 note particularly modulations in sixth and seventh measures to finish of first movement. Kind-hearted musicians lay these mistakes to misprint; I hope so, but judging from lack of melody and rhythm and constant robusto music through the entire score these can hardly be called misprints. At the finish of "Less Than the Dust" the same heavy music demonstrated when the poor girl is crying and broken-hearted over her supposed disappointment. I know the expression marks at the finish are marked "slow," but the music does not fit the picture, no matter how slow. Why not the cue sheet? I do not intend to give it a black eye, because I consider it most valuable from this point of view. It is a great musical catalogue to select from, especially where a motion picture performer is debarred from having access to the late, up-to-date music. But in this great catalogue could not some sympathetic, pretty theme close the piece with the word "maybe," leaving a quiet, restful feeling upon the audience?

I made an attempt to produce this score with a sixteen-piece orchestra. We got as far as the thunderstorm, and I found it so misfitting that I dismissed the rehearsal. It was not the fault of my musicians, as they are well up in this line of work. It simply grated on my nerves—the storm and quiet games at sea with thunderbolts and thunder crashes supposed to be given by ye Mr. Trap Drummer.

I used such pieces as Pagaola, certain parts of Katinka and many other Oriental pieces which I have, improvising to suit the different scenes where necessary. I have three violinists who assist me in this grade of work.

Referring to Miss Hetherington speaking of operatic music; I do not agree with her in many of her statements which I shall be pleased to give later.

I shall appreciate the publication of this letter.

Yours very truly,
ALICE SMYTHE JAY,

L. Box 120, Los Angeles, Cal.

I hate to criticise, "but"—

This Department was created—to help the musician, and principally for the purpose of developing and perfecting the art of playing good music for pictures. It was not intended to criticise those who, in our opinion, are doing certain things wrong, and are not playing such and such number for such and such scene.

The more minds, the more creations. One feels funny about a certain scene, and the other one is very sad about it. If these two men would have to write music for that particular scene what would be the result? and what would you or I and others think about it—but here comes the "but"—

There is a limit to everything, and I'm absolutely not willing to blame all those foolish and ridiculous musical settings and music scores which have been prepared in the last two years for pictures, simply on feelings, tastes, or whatever you may call it.

I am starting to believe that it is mere lack of knowledge, I also heard and tried to play the music score for "Less Than the Dust," and I must admit "Miss Alice Smythe Jay" is just in her criticism—such musical offerings are bound to make you forget—all your principles as "Do not criticise," etc., and, after all, you can only perfect something if you debate about it, and this is just the reason why we published Miss Jay's letter.

Let those who create such musical offerings either learn or give up. I know of an exhibitor who booked "Less Than the Dust," and absolutely refused to play the music score issued by the "Artcraft Picture Corp." This score, the exhibitor remarked, is an impossible thing, and I'd rather have a Cue Sheet. I personally compiled such a Cue Sheet for this picture, which was also used by this exhibitor. As this picture is an exceptionally good production—and is still booking big, I will—for those who expect to play it—reproduce my Cue Sheet in these columns, and would greatly appreciate to hear from Miss Jay (and those who will play it) what she thinks about it.

As to musical cue sheets in general I wish to say that many of them are put up very badly, but many are very good and helpful. As most cue sheets issued by the various film companies are prepared by various men in this business, I think it would not be a bad idea to hear from our readers, which of these cue sheets they found the best, and most practical, of course—such cue sheets are not and cannot be designed to solve every musical requirement of the picture, but in my judgment should help and not mislead the musician.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

The Strand Theatre, Philadelphia

The Strand, Philadelphia, is certainly a markedly beautiful structure. In it are embodied some of the latest ideas of construction plus luxurious fittings and artistic decorations.

Situated as it is at the intersection of Germantown avenue and Venango street, the first a business, the latter a residence district, there is a good chance to draw from both transients and ueighborhood patrons. When to this advantage is added the feature of special boxes for motor parties, reserved in advance, and a good-sized garage with free service for the parking of cars, a third and most valuable class of patrons is bound to be attracted to the house.

Once at the Strand, one sees a building of substantial concrete-faced brick, with door frames and window casings of bronze green. A high class electric sign flashes its welcome, attractive albeit not so imposing as some.

Once inside the doors, the atmosphere impresses immediately. The theatre proper is about 130 feet square. The lobby is triangular-shaped, with tiled floor, marble wainscoting, rattan furniture, marble and bronze ticket booth, bronze mirrors, Oriental rugs, and plush cushions. In the centre a luxurious circular divan is topped by a Moorish brass lamp. Eight glass doors give light and brilliancy. Between the mirrors are paintings of popular stars. Blue and gray and gold effect is carried out, even to the rugs.

Inside the theatre proper, the color scheme is of soft old rose, gold and ivory, with just enough blue and white to effect a pleasing contrast.

There are in all 1800 seats. A small gallery at the rear shows tiers of loges at each side, while the motor-party boxes are about the centre of the house, commanding an excellent view. As a matter of fact every seat is good, with no obstructions anywhere.

The opera chairs are of satinwood, fitted with leather air cushions, while the boxes and loges have white rattan chairs with blue cushions. Rose plush hangings, rose brocaded silk walls and tapestry panels are well set off by harmonious decorations done by Barbarita Co., of Pittsburgh. Cameo medallions on the side walls and a ceiling effect of symbolical figures representing the drama are the theme of the decorative design.

Heywood & Co., Philadelphia, furnished the chairs. The screen is a Rembusch crystal gold fibre. The stage settings are particularly attractive. An asbestos curtain is lowered after each performance.

Simplex machines, complete with every latest improvement, and motor generator with a 90-foot throw insure good projection, in a booth with every newest wrinkle, manned by two very competent operators.

This theatre has exhaust ventilating system, automatic steam heating system, semi-indirect lighting system, and other up-to-the-minute features.

Thirteen sets of dimmers, six on the stage and seven in the house give the popular colored-light effects. There are thirty-two exits. A novel feature is the entrance from garage into theatre, so that automobilists having purchased tickets can save time by not being compelled to return to the lobby after parking their cars.

The dressing rooms and reception rooms are on the mezzanine floor. The ladies' room, with its dainty fittings of blue and white, is provided with writing paper, engraved with the theatre's name, complete cabinet of first aid remedies, all beauty aids, besides a helpful maid in attendance. This is bound to attract the women.

The little reception room for both men and women is especially a gem of beauty. The owners of the Strand, Mrs. J. and Herbert Effinger, mother and son, have succeeded in making this a cozy retreat, with very artistic effect. Here the colors are blue and gray, carried out in brocaded draperies, striped velvet upholstery, silk, poplin window curtains, gray carpet, gray and blue walls and blue silk hand-made shades for the lamps. The ornaments and pictures harmonize even to the ebony wood of the furniture.

Strand Theatre, Germantown Avenue and Venango Street, Philadelphia

Besides first run of big features in Tioga (as this section of Philadelphia is called), the Strand makes a special appeal with its music.

An orchestra of eighteen trained musicians is under the skillful leadership of Prof. Jacob Friedman, well known in local musical circles. Special overtures are given before the feature, both at matinee and evening performances. Henry Spiller will play the large Kimball organ, built on both sides of the stage, now nearing completion. In addition noted soloists sing at every evening performance.

There are forty-two employes, including seven girl ushers.

J. Springer, a well-known theatre man, formerly of the Cross Keys, Philadelphia, is manager of the Strand.

The theatre advertising includes, besides the daily papers, bill boards, window cards and the use of a large mailing list for special attractions.

Besides the music and the long feature, a comedy, scenics and a topical weekly make up the program. There is a daily matinee and an evening performance, the prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents in the afternoon, 20 to 35 cents at night.

The Strand opened New Year's Day, 1917. Invitations were sent to prominent people and a capacity audience marked the occasion. The special opening feature was the showing on the screen of well-known characters and scenes of the neighborhood.

Hoffman & Co., of Philadelphia, were the architects, and Ketcham and McQuade the contractors for this handsome quarter of a million dollar photoplay house, which will bear favorable comparison with any theatre in the entire country.

The Correct Typhoon Fan Price

AN unfortunate typographical error occurred in the February 17th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in the advertisement of the Typhoon Fan Company, 1544 Broadway, New York City. The price for their No. 6 outfit, including two 72" Typhoons, One 5 Horse-Power A.C. motor, suitable for 500 seat theatre, should have read $397.00 instead of $797.00 as printed.

The Typhoon Fan Company is doing an extensive business all over the country with both large and small houses. They have enlarged their factory considerably and are ready to meet the demands of any size or specially built theatre.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

CALIFORNIA

Redwood City is to have another moving picture house, W. S. Salisbury having leased the old Bell theatre in Main street. After spending $2,000 in remodeling the interior, Salisbury expects to open his showhouse about the middle of February.

CONNECTICUT

It is probable that work will be started in the spring on the proposed business block and picture theatre to be erected at New Haven on Broadway, above the Boardman school, by Dr. E. Franklin Johnson of 200 York street, and others.

GEORGIA

Mrs. A. Converse of Valdosta has closed a contract with Tyson Brothers for the construction of a motion picture theatre building in this town.

ILLINOIS

It is reported that the Princess theatre at Arcola is to be reopened after a shutdown of several weeks.

Bids were opened a few days ago for the construction of the new Grand theatre to be erected at the corner of North Fourth and Madison streets, Herrin, and the contract was awarded to Cordina and Williams of this city. The theatre is to be a one-story building, 75 x 145 feet, and will be without pillars or posts and four big truss beams weighing about five tons each will support the roof. Work is expected to begin as soon as the weather will permit, and Mr. Cardina expects to have the building completed by the first of September.

A new enterprise is being launched in Brownstown. Messrs. Hyatt and Sidwell are fitting up the Stine Hall as a motion picture theatre to operate Wednesday and Saturday nights.

INDIANA

The Star theatre of Fort Wayne is now located in the new Theatorium in the south side of the store formerly occupied by E. Clark.

KANSAS

Construction of the new theatre at McPherson on the present site of the Grace theatre will, according to J. F. Tourney and C. E. Oelrich, be commenced as soon as weather conditions permit, probably within the next two or three weeks. The new plans call for a balcony with added accommodation for at least two hundred spectators. The lobby will extend to a depth of twelve feet with a width of the entire building. The front, from the ground to the roof—including the lobby—will be built in the most modern style. Entering the theatre from the lobby the patrons will pass through mirrored doors to the foyer. On either side will be broad stairways leading to the balcony. From the foyer we pass into the auditorium proper. The theatre will be equipped with a modern stage. It is Mr. Oelrich's intention to occasionally get high-class singers and musicians as an added attraction to the pictures. The auditorium will be about thirty feet high at the foyer or front end and will increase about four and a half feet at the stage end on account of the inclined floor. The interior decorative scheme will be carried out in heavy beam relief work, etc. The lighting system will be mostly of the indirect type now so widely used.

MASSACHUSETTS

A. B. Ross is planning to build a motion picture theatre between the Central Vermont railroad and Ross block, Springfield. It is planned for a one-story building with two office rooms besides the motion picture hall.

Architect Wilson Harlow of Middleboro has prepared sketches for a motion picture theatre, two stores and a clubroom to be erected in Main street, Falmouth. Plans call for wood and stucco construction, theatre to be 50 x 100 feet and stores and clubroom 30 x 40 feet. Cost, $25,000.

MICHIGAN

James W. Himebaugh, proprietor of the Royal theatre, Holland, contemplates building a new theatre on part of the vacant property between the Meyers' Music Store and the Harmon building, now occupied by the Western Union Telegraph Co., and unless all signs fail, by April 1 the most beautiful movie theatre in western Michigan will adorn the north side of Eighth street. Plans have been prepared and contractors are figuring on a building to be 115 feet long and 30 feet wide, will have a very sloping floor with the seats so arranged that it will permit every one in the audience to see plainly. There will be two aisles with a large block of seats in the centre of the auditorium.

MISSOURI

John E. Lewis of Independence has closed a five-year lease with a St. Louis man for a motion picture theatre, 50 x 116 feet, which Mr. Lewis will erect at once on a part of the site of the former Lewis theatre building which burned a year ago. The seating capacity will be 800. The building which burned a year ago had a large athletic hall and was the largest building in Independence.

Plans for the construction of a $100,000 theatre in Springfield, to adjoin one of similar value now owned by them here, have been approved by Grubel Brothers of Kansas City. The new building will be used as a motion picture theatre, while the present theatre will be used as a vaudeville house.

MONTANA

The new Lafayette theatre, Mrs. Leona Deakin, manager, will open up shortly in West Great Falls, using three changes of Pathe Gold Roosters each week.

Walls and roof of the new Rialto theatre, Butte, are now completed and interior work is being rushed. The exterior of this building is the finest looking of anything in the northwest excelling by far anything seen in Denver, Salt Lake, Minneapolis or Spokane. It is a newly constructed concrete building of four stories, the outer walls of which are faced with especially made white terra cotta, beautifully decorated and set off by bits of highly colored stone here and there. The interior is to be most elaborately decorated and furnished, and when completed, the Rialto will be one of the show places of the west. It will be operated by the Greater Theatres Company of Seattle, Jensen and Von Herberg, and it is rumored that it will show Artcraft, Paramount, Vitagraph and Pathe pictures.

EXHIBITORS!!!

The largest manufacturer of machine parts is going to Fight the Combine!!

Efforts are now being made to form a combination of dealers in motion picture machines, parts and supplies. We are informed the declared object of this move is to obtain higher prices, eliminate competition, dominate the trade and tell exhibitors where they get off.

We think that during the past ten years we have made a larger number and greater variety of parts than the combined output of all other manufacturers and that we are now in a position to take such care of the trade that Exhibitors Will Not Be Throttled!!

Sales have always been made in wholesale quantities only, to manufacturers of machines and dealers, but if any exhibitor cannot now obtain our products from his dealer, we will fill his orders direct. Our price on parts for Power No. 6B, Power No. 6A, Power No. 6, Power No. 5, Edison Model "B" and Edison Exhibition machines is:

The Orpheum theatre, Polson, managed by D. Earl Evans, is again running after a short shutdown occasioned by fire. Taking advantage of this layoff, Manager Evans installed two new Simplex machines and it is the boast that Polson sees as good projection as the larger cities.

Fire gutted the Rex theatre, Red Lodge, a few days ago, and the owners, Sandels and Honkala, announce that plans have been made to rebuild at once. This makes the seventh house in Montana to be destroyed by fire this winter.

The Ronan Opera House, Ronan, H. M. Gehlert, manager, was burned down recently, the place catching fire from a blazing store next door. Immediate steps are contemplated to reconstruct.

W. B. Hartwig's new Pastime at Dillon will be open in about a month and will be one of the show places in this vicinity. The building has been erected especially for the theatre and represents an investment of over $60,000. Mr. Hartwig is a son of W. J. Hartwig, owner of the Antlers theatre, Helena, and interested also in the Orpheum and Liberty of that place. With one son at Deer Lodge and another Hamilton, the Hartwigs are very prominently identified with the picture industry in Montana.

NEBRASKA

The Dundee theatre, owned and managed by A. C. Hartman of the Omaha Film Exchange, closed its doors some weeks ago. The Dundee movie fans found that they missed it. Reading in a local paper the story of a theatre in Chicago which operated successfully on the co-operative basis, they have talked the matter over among themselves and called a meeting at the theatre recently to perfect plans. Business men of Dundee, including Manager Hartman, Judge Slabaugh, W. R. Adair, Harry Deuel and D. W. Johnson, are backing the idea. They plan to sell stock among the residents of the suburb. The profits will be spent on feature first-run films.

PENNSYLVANIA

All rumors concerning the reconstruction of the Grand Opera House property at Pittsburgh were recently quieted when Harry Davis announced that the Opera House would certainly be rebuilt on most modern lines and while plans were not yet completed he said that among its allied interests would be a motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of not less than 2,000, splendid equipment, and in every respect the equal of any other moving picture theatre that has to date been erected anywhere in America.

The Maple Grove Amusement Company, of Lancaster, has obtained a charter from the State Department to run motion picture theatres in that city. The capital stock is $5,000, and the incorporators are: Ralph Coho, of Lancaster; Ralph A. Black, Philadelphia, and Eugene P. Coho, of Philadelphia. Ralph W. Coho is treasurer of the new corporation.

RHODE ISLAND

The Westminster-Union Corporation of New York has taken a twenty-year lease upon the old Keith theatre property here. A new Keith playhouse is being erected and will be completed in order to open with the next season, it is believed. A clause in the lease of the main building provides that the house must be used for at least twenty-five weeks each year for motion pictures or other theatrical productions. The new lease will not affect the present vaudeville season or the Albee Stock company season next summer.

VERMONT

Brandon is to have a real motion picture theatre. Plans have been prepared for the reconstruction of a confectionery store belonging to F. N. Packard and the fitting up of a theatre with a seating capacity of 250. Pictures will be shown every evening, except Sunday, at popular prices.

VIRGINIA

A Rembusch Crystal Gold Fibre Screen was placed in the Colonial theatre, Newport News, Va. This theatre, owned by A. Cipriana, Jas. Tierno, manager, is a 600-seated house opening on February 15. The Calehuff Company also supplied a Power 6B machine, a Caille ticket-chopper and minor equipment.

Another new theatre to be supplied with the Rembusch screen by the Calehuff Company is the Bluebird of Richmond, Va., owned by Mrs. A. E. Thorpe, Walter R. Coulter, manager. This is a 700-seated house on Broad street, the main shopping thoroughfare, and is scheduled to open February 20.

WASHINGTON

Spokane is to have another addition to its list of motion picture theatres. It will be located in Hillyard, a north side suburb, where a big population of railroad shopmen makes an important clientele. The new house will be known as the Gem. Its proprietors will be Ben Spencer and A. L. Langley, both of Spokane. A building now standing on the site at 525 Market street will be converted into a modern and attractive playhouse. Film service will be Artcraft, Bluebird and Universal. "The Purple Mask" serial also will be booked, it is expected.

Sworn Testimony For the New York Legislature

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, President of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, testifying before the New York legislative investigation committee, said:

"Goldwyn will have spent $1,000,000 for productions before its first picture is released.

"Goldwyn believes that the story is the important factor and that it will become constantly more important. But, pending such a development, Goldwyn is combining the greatest stars with the greatest stories.

"Our artists under contract include Mary Garden, Maxine Elliott, Mae Marsh, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy. These great personalities are worth every dollar we pay them."

Commenting editorially on this, the New York Sun says: "Mr. Goldfish is right." Hundreds of newspapers and thousands of exhibitors will indorse the sanity of this Goldwyn policy.

MAE MARSH

Every great newspaper authority praises her dramatic power, her youthful appeal, her sincerity and points to her constantly growing popularity.

Here are some of the things the critics say:

LOUELLA PARSONS, Chicago Herald: Mae Marsh is the best actress on the screen.

ASHTON STEVENS, Chicago Examiner: Mae Marsh is the first actress in my experience to possess a mental magnetism translatable to the celluloid.

W. N. HARDY, Boston Post: Mae Marsh is a girl of smiles and tears—a remarkable figure in the screen world.

RANDOLPH BARTLETT, Photoplay Magazine: Mae Marsh possesses the biggest thing in the creative world—SINCERITY. A star of the first magnitude at twenty.

CHARLES DARNTON, N. Y. Evening World: Mae Marsh is a vivid, electric actress.

ROB REEL, Chicago American: Mae Marsh is becoming the most popular star in America.

R. G. McCOY, Pittsburg Leader: Mae Marsh is "The Girl of 1,000 Faces" . . . every one of them appealing.

NEW YORK TIMES: Mae Marsh is the Maude Adams of the screen.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS: Mae Marsh is the Bernhardt of the films.

HARRIETTE UNDERHILL, New York Tribune: There is only one Mae Marsh.

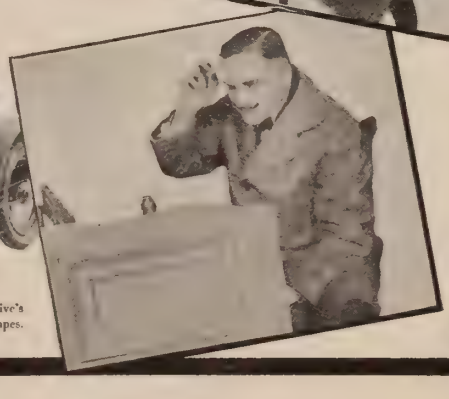
"Arsene Lupin"

A Five Part Blue Ribbon Feature From Paul Potter's Mystery Drama

Directed by Paul Scardon

Arsene Lupin, master crook of the Paris underworld, in the guise of a nobleman, becomes betrothed to a wealthy girl in order to steal the treasures from her father's collection. The mysterious thefts are discovered and the best detective in France is put on the case.

At first, unsuspected by the detective, Lupin, seeming to aid him, sends him on false clues to save himself and the girl he loves.



The detective finally realizes that Lupin is the thief, but under his very eyes Lupin gets away with the richest treasure of all the collection.

To save the girl, held by the detective, Lupin lures him to his apartment and pretends to give himself up.

Then he turns the tables on the detective, traps him—

Disguises himself as the detective—

Steals the detective's machine and escapes.

Thousands upon thousands have seen the play "Arsene Lupin." Millions have read the wonderful "Arsene Lupin" stories.

And with all this ready-made popularity of the play itself, Earle Williams, the screen's biggest drawing-card, returns to his host of admirers in the finest photoplay of his career—so declared by the capacity audiences which crowded The Rialto, New York, the week of February 11th at the first run.

Dear Sirs:-

It is very gratifying to be able to voluntarily advise you that the Gaiety Theatre, 9205 Commercial Avenue, Chicago, of which I am manager, has shown the most phenomenal business on THE SECRET KINGDOM of any series or feature ever shown in our theatre.

From the first day on which we showed THE SECRET KINGDOM the receipts showed an improvement of 50% on the gross of the day, and since that, have been constantly going up.

The patrons of my theatre are enthusiastic in their appreciation of THE SECRET KINGDOM and are loyal in their support.

We feel we have taken on an exceptional service in not only the SECRET KINGDOM but the balance of Greater Vitagraph features, which are run on the same day, and are proving themselves the greatest drawing card of the week.

Mary Pickford's new picture will charm everyone that sees it regardless of age. A tragic incident in which little Gwen sees things as they really are brings home a moral most forcibly and presents surprises both in the theme of the story as well as in artistic effects of rare accomplishment in the photoplay art. Staged by a master and with Mary Pickford in the stellar role, this subject will strike a chord of favor among young and old alike for its power to entertain, educate and surprise.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU MAKES FILM DEBUT IN "GREATER WOMAN"

MARJORIE RAMBEAU, famous star of "Cheating Cheaters," makes her screen debut this week. In the first of the releases from the studios of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, Miss Rambeau appears as Auriole Praed, who falls in love with an artist. Despite the fact that this is Miss Rambeau's first appearance before a motion picture camera she performs with all the ease, grace and lack of self-consciousness that marks her work upon the speaking stage. To see her act one would imagine that she had been working in the studios for some time.

A Broadway Beauty.

Miss Rambeau brings both beauty and brains to her work. On Broadway she has risen to fame as one of the most radiant beauties of that famous thoroughfare. In her playing of various roles she has demonstrated time and again the amount of study she has put in in creating them. The first of the Rambeau-Mutual Photoplays is an adaptation of the famous European success, "The Greater Woman," from the pen of Algernon Boyesen. It is in five acts. It is lavishly staged. Miss Rambeau is surrounded by a cast that includes many players of note. The lighting effects and stage settings are unusual to say the least.

Heart Interest Story.

A real heart interest story is unfolded as the film progresses. A woman's fight for her husband's love is vividly depicted. When the wife discovers that another woman is attractive to her husband, she sets out to prove herself the greater of the two. The working out of the story will hold audiences spellbound. "The Greater Woman" is released the week of February 26. Bookings can be made now at any Mutual Film Exchange.

American Signs New Players

Within the past few weeks the American Film Company, Inc., has added several players of note to its roster. George Fisher, until recently connected with the Ince studios, was engaged to play opposite Mary Miles Minter. Jack Vosburgh, another newcomer, has a strong role in William Russell's next picture—"My Fighting Gentleman," and still more recently Lucille Younge was signed to play a heavy role opposite Russell in "High Play."

WORK PROGRESSING ON MUTUAL SERIAL— "RAILROAD RAIDERS"

Work on "The Railroad Raiders" is progressing nicely at the Los Angeles studios of the Signal Film Corporation. "The Railroad Raiders" is the big new chapterplay starring Helen Holmes. It will be released through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. It is a tremendously powerful story of railroad life. It is based upon a remarkable railroad story from the pen of a man who has spent years of his life in actual railway circles. Many of the incidents are based on real happenings on certain western railroads. Some of these incidents are spectacular in the extreme. "The Railroad Raiders" will set new speed records when the throttle is opened and the right of way signal finally given. Reservations can be made at any Mutual Film Exchange. The new chapterplay is in fifteen chapters, each two reels in length.

"Girl Reporters" Opens New Theater

For the opening attraction of a new Ohio theatre, the management selected the Mutual's big serial of newspaper life —"The Perils of Our Girl Reporters." Turnaway business resulted. Earl Metcalfe, Helen Greene and Zena Keefe are continuing to attract crowds. Nothing exactly like this thrilling series of newspaper stories has ever before been screened. Exhibitors are loud in their praise of its novelty. Any Mutual Exchange can arrange bookings. Each story is complete in itself—each is an actual incident from real newspaper life.

"DAMAGED GOODS" NOW AVAILABLE FOR BIG THEATERS

MUTUAL Film Exchanges all over the country are reporting a tremendous demand for the New Edition of "Damaged Goods"—the big seven reel Mutual Special Feature, starring Richard Bennett. Exhibitors everywhere are taking advantage of the opportunity offered them for showing this big feature attraction which has played some of the biggest theatres in America at admission prices of 50c or higher. This play, revised, re-edited—with a new prologue and a new conclusion, has just been released anew. It is an attraction that has been endorsed by some of the most famous divines, physicians and social uplift workers in the country. It features Richard Bennett—one of America's foremost male stars. It is a production that has been nationally advertised. Full week showings in big cities throughout America are now being contracted for. Full details regarding prices, open dates, advertising helps and lobby displays on "Damaged Goods" can be obtained from your nearest Mutual Exchange.

Chaplin Scores Hit With "East Street"

"Easy Street," the newest of the Chaplin-Mutual Specials, has been a riot since the first day of its release. Theatres all over the country have "stood 'em up" with the latest Chaplin-Mutual release. The public has hugely enjoyed it. It isn't a promised success—a picture that is likely to be a hit—but a success accomplished—one that has already been proven to be a money maker. The exhibitor booking it is taking no gamble. He is certain of its drawing powers. Now available at all Mutual Exchanges are "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," "One A. M.," "The Count," "The Pawnshop," "Behind the Screen," "The Rink" and "Easy Street." All of them are Chaplin-Mutual Specials. All of them are playing to capacity business wherever shown. Some theatres have played them over and over again, the rebooking proving more profitable than did even the first run on the same subject.

The sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky," many theatres report, has drawn even bigger houses than the original story. Its photography, direction, stage-settings, story and enactment all are of high calibre. It is a splendid attraction whether you played the original serial or not. Booking now at Mutual Exchanges.

Each·one·better·than the·one·before.

Four of the SEVEN DEADLY SINS have been shown with this result.

ENVY

"The series gets a flying start in 'Envy'—Snappy Stuff—Miss Murdock delightful—Shirley Mason could hardly be improved upon—Other manufacturers should envy the McClure Company—Should be eagerly watched for by exhibitors."

—THE CRITICS.

PRIDE

"Twice as good as 'Envy'—A great bit of work—The audience is sure of plenty of thrills—Many dramatic moments—Photography faultless—Wealth of fast 'snap-snap' action—If the McClure people can keep up the pace they have set in No. 2 for the rest of the seven, they should find a ready market."

—THE CRITICS.

▽ TRIANGLE McCLURE PICTURES EXCHANGES ▽

GREED

"Particularly impressed with 'Greed'—Moulded in the form most popular with the fans—A fine full-grown punch—The maximum of dramatic surprise and thrill—Holds one's interest from beginning to end—For a play containing ingenuity of plot, accumulative interest, we recommend 'Greed.'"

—THE CRITICS.

SLOTH

"Will bring applause, especially at this time—A timely release—Charlotte Walker puts fire and sincerity into her interpretation—Liberal use of the flag—Designed to arouse patriotism—Shirley Mason a convincing and well graced figure—Plenty of that McClure cardinal virtue—action."

THE CRITICS.

"Betsy's Burglar"

is a little "slavey," who dreams of princes and royal purple. A grocer's boy who is a correspondence school detective dreams too, and in their conjuring up of adventure and riches and priencely men and women, they stumble upon a mystery that takes them through all sorts of thrilling situations and—is a woman such as all men hope to win.
Betsy is not a "slavey" at all.

There are five reels of mirth and tenderness and mystery and breath-taking thrills.

This is the story of a country boy who wins success in the marts of a big city, who is torn between love of woman and love of power.

He is drawn into the meshes of plot and intrigue and then—
Ellen Holton steps forward with all the sacrifice and love that only woman can give.

A play of thunderous action, thrilling, appealing.

MYSTERY OF THE DOUBLE CROSS

An adaptation of an original story written by Gilson Willets and featuring

Mollie King and Leon Bary

Advertised in all the great Hearst papers and many others.

Produced by ASTRA

Those who have seen it say: The greatest serial ever made is

and it is the first feature serial

The story is so clean, so real and absorbing, the picture is so well directed that it will make Mollie King a star the day it is released.

Already big circuit managers are besieging us for bookings. Mr. Exhibitor, you should have two or three episodes screened for you at the nearest Pathé Exchange. We are confident as to what your verdict will be.

My dear Mr. Seelye:

I want to congratulate you upon having secured "The Vicar of Wakefield" production and must congratulate Mr. Thanhouser, Mr. Ward, and his son who directed the picture. It is a masterly effort and I am indeed glad to be able to book it at the Rialto on the 25th of February. I am sure that my patrons will also be delighted with it.

There were at least thirty-five people in the theatre at the time of its private showing and everyone was most enthusiastic about it.

Very truly yours,
S. L. Rothapfel
Managing Director.

Chock full of life and humanity Easily the best photo-play attraction of the year.

The Nestor of motion picture exhibitors Mr. S. L. Rothapfel not only recommends this production but he plays it at his beautiful Rialto Theatre entire week commencing Feb. 25. That's convincing, is'nt it?

"We presented your feature 'SKINNER'S DRESS SUIT.' In my estimation, it is destined to rank high among photo-plays of renown. It is entertaining and enjoyable from the first moment to the last. It is pure, clean and sweet. In it Bryant Washburn surely comes into his own and gives a characterization that is truly splendid.

I listened to the comments of the patrons and it was the unanimous verdict that the picture was fine. Even the House Manager, usually blase and unresponsive, had a smile from ear to ear and exclaimed 'It's a bear'."

The Brooklyn Eagle says

"THE GREAT SECRET"

Metro Serial Is Breaking All Box Office Records.

Metro's new serial, "The Great Secret," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-stars, is already breaking box office records and achieving a tribute rarely accorded a motion picture—that of receiving audible praise from its audiences. Exhibitors are unanimous in reports of the way in which this new screen novel has been received by their patrons.

A sample indication of this general appreciation is shown at B. F. Keith's Greenpoint Theater, where Manager Massaud says he is playing to capacity and is regularly sold out by 2 o clock on each day that "The Great Secret" is on the bill.

Besides the human appeal in this screen novel of fifteen chapters there are sufficient thrills and stirring scenes to awaken the interest of the most jaded theatergoer. William Christy Cabanne, who adapted and produced "The Great Secret," is known as "the wizard of the screen" and was for years chief of staff to D. W. Griffith.

MR. EXHIBITOR:—Do you realize the importance of your single reel pictures? Our single reelers are features—and are treated as such. Our entire organization is devoting its greatest efforts to produce the unusual and combine 3 in 1—Scenic, Story, Comedy. You will find these three important elements in our one-reel Robert C. Bruce, American Adventure Pictures.

MR. PETER MILNE, of the M. P. News, in his review of "Mammals of Strange Form" (500 feet) from Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature," said: "It gives the spectator a laugh hand in hand with a lesson,—is one of the most comical sights we have seen in a month. Chaplin was the other." These pictures also combine 3 in 1—Educational, Story, Comedy.

THE Strand, Broadway, New York, has been featuring these pictures for the past eighteen consecutive weeks, and will continue.

Make'em Laugh

–Make 'em All Laugh!

That's the trick, and it is up to you to book the comedies that will turn it. You will always get the people if you do. Everybody wants a good laugh.

Producers know this, and try to produce that kind, but how often do they fill the bill? They turn out some that make some people laugh some of the time. More often they produce those that don't make anyone laugh any time. Once in a while they hit the nail on the head and produce one that will make anybody laugh any time. That's the one you ought to have, if you can get it.

Ebony Comedies Are That Kind

When you want a comedy that will make anybody laugh any time—book an Ebony.

Ebony productions are something different. Actors are Negroes —just plain colored folks. If you know anything about these people, you must admit they are funny—funniest people in the world—they bring a laugh when no others can. They are natural comedians, full of innate humor and pantomime, which enables them to portray comedy as no one else can. Ebony comedies will help you build up a reputation for exhibiting the best in comedy photo-plays. What colored vaudeville acts mean as attractions to vaudeville managers, Ebony comedies will mean as attractions to the motion picture exhibitor—always among the best attractions booked. They are new and will get the people immediately. All will like them. Everyone is a big laugh. Book one you will want them all. They get better as we go along. The best are yet to come. The first is:

What the Women Can Do

WE are in receipt of a very sensible and sincere letter from Margaret B. Shull, of Ann Arbor, in which she asks what Women's Clubs, acting for the public, can do for better, cleaner motion pictures.

A great deal, Mrs. Shull.

The friendly and practical tone of your letter strengthens the conviction we had last Spring after meeting several of the thoughtful, liberal and practical leaders of the Women's Clubs, then in convention in New York, and the contention we then held that the women of this country could go far toward settling the whole menace of official censorship—in the best interests of pictures and of the picture industry.

MRS. SHULL says: "After all, what we troublesome Women's Clubs want is not so much. I believe that we and the best producers and best exhibitors all want the same things."

We agree heartily; and the same things you all want are — cleaner, better pictures.

You and the best producers and the best exhibitors ought, therefore, to act together.

You can act together; and thereby you can curb at first and eventually you can stop the activity of the piratical producer and the unscrupulous exhibitor. Both in their respective branches are in a decided minority; but they do exist.

YOU don't believe in censorship—no thoughtful, educated woman can; so you don't just know what to do.

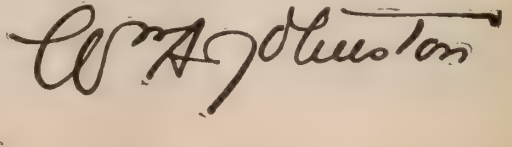
But something must be done.

We suggest, therefore, that you work with the best exhibitors and the best producers; and that you work against the other kind.

You can begin with the exhibitor at once. If you—and this applies, of course, to every Woman's Club everywhere—find a picture being advertised which in your sound judgment is dangerous to the morals of your community, you can appeal to the authorities and have it suppressed.

You can also suppress the posters advertising it upon the same grounds. You will generally find these pictures not nearly so bad as they are advertised. But the bad poster is in itself just as harmful as the bad picture and calls for the same action from the authorities. The authorities have this full power. Make them use it.

AGAIN, co-operate with the best exhibitors.



Bring them in touch with your schools, churches, societies and clubs. Asks the theatres to advertise, with slides, the church, service, and all religious, social and civic gatherings. The theatres will do it. Many do it now.

Then, in turn, let the schools and churches announce and recommend the pictures which the family and especially the children ought to see. Let the Women's Clubs and other societies help in this work. They can do a great deal.

Make the picture theatre a real, integral part of your community life. Make it your library and reading room.

Start this home work—now. Work in the field right near you.

If this work becomes national—and surely it's important enough —you will very shortly make the exhibition unprofitable and thereby you will stop the production of unfit pictures.

Speaking Editorially:

Public Standards

"I AM sure we all approve of real censorship from within, as advocated by Mr. D. W. Griffith.

"But here is my question. This movement for censorship from within is to meet the demand from the public for censorship.

"How can we help—we, the intelligent women of the country? How can we get around public censorship, which we don't want, and yet meet the public demand for clean pictures?"

This is the question put to us by a woman, whose letter is made the subject of the editorial on the preceding page.

Her question deserves an answer from the industry.

Mr. Griffith's committee, we take it, doesn't expect to rely upon standards made by itself or by the producers.

This is impossible—quite as impossible as for the producers to censor their own pictures.

These standards must come jointly from the public—from constant contact with the public, its tastes and desires.

The National Board of Review, in our conception of its work, is actually furnishing the public contact now.

Firstly, it provides for a review of all pictures by a section of the public. Secondly, it is increasing its contact with the public everywhere through its constructive affiliations with local organizations.

Our answer to Mrs. Shull's letter is to have her local organizations work directly with the National Board of Review and thereby assist Mr. Griffith's committee in its very important work—by giving it public standards to work from.

The "News" and the Newspaper

THE Milwaukee Journal, in its photoplay section, stamps many of its news stories with "MOTION PICTURE NEWS says." One feature article of considerable length and much interest is made up from the biographies in "MOTION PICTURE NEWS Studio Directory."

In the same week other clippings from the editorial columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS have reached us from the Atlanta Constitution, Boston Traveler, Seattle Times, and Omaha World-Herald.

Oh, Those Stars!

THE amazing news has percolated out to the public from a lawyer's office that a star is running away from a $2,500-a-week salary in quest of a golden grail of even greater dimensions.

The star cannot be held to blame. Any man wants all the money he can get.

But the men who will insist on jeopardizing their businesses by ladling out salaries several times as great as that of the President of the United States, deserve all that the nervous future has in store for them.

The Contest Quickens

ANOTHER candidate clamors for entry into our censorship assininity contest.

The Ohio Board, after due reflection and contemplation, sharpened their shears and snipped out the following title from a "Ham and Bud" comedy: "Now you've chased the chicken away."

Taking Our Own Medicine

IN an article appearing in the February issue of The World Court, President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Corporation, makes a thought-compelling brief for the motion picture as a destroyer of international boundaries. That the motion picture, through telling how "the other half" lives, will play an incalculable part in the movement for permanent peace that is to follow the present war, is a point well stated by Mr. Freuler.

The screen as an educator will serve its purpose well; as pupils we must feel that film men are slow to learn the very lesson they are teaching.

Would not a little study of "the other half" go a long way towards smoothing the road for a solution of the internal problems that abound in the film world? The attitude of distrust and fear created by an international boundary has its duplicate in the relations between manufacturers, distributors and producers, between the man in New York and the man in Broken Bow.

The task of setting our house in order will assuredly be facilitated when the doors are opened that bar an appreciation of what "the other fellow" is thinking and doing.

The Tax Committee

WHAT appeared to be, at the time of its initiation, a primary school for the absorption of knowledge relating to the film industry, has become a sedate, serious investigation, more thorough, probably, than any previous affair of its kind.

Whe Wheeler Committeemen have gone to the roots of the industry with tireless persistency.

They have been enlightened to such an extent that they can dispense real knowledge on an abstruse subject to their less fortunate associates in Albany.

They have made one vitally important decision: that the small exhibitor will fail if he is taxed.

What they decide to do about the overpaid star will be awaited with interest.

The Alert Exhibitor

WE congratulate those progressive and wide awake exhibitors, who, in many parts of the country have heeded the appeal for longer runs. Elsewhere in this issue their successful experiences in discarding the daily program change in favor of two, three and four day runs are recounted.

They have proved that the long run is a money saver and a money earner.

They realize that the inevitable result of the longer run will be a more constant and a growing intelligent public interest.

The House Is Wrong

THE Motion Picture industry, at times, suggests to us a large house filled with many people and built upon a wobbly foundation. There is constant discord and discomfort. Everybody thinks the other person is at fault; everybody believes the other person is getting the best of it; everybody is suspicious and warlike to the point of anarchy.

Whereas the true situation is that the house itself is built wrong and the distress is about equally divided and is neither the gain nor the fault of any one individual at all.

Ousting of Frank by Ochs Illegal Says Trigger

Will Seek Injunction Preventing League Executive Committee from Changing Control of Chicago Exposition—Reviews History of Hurry-Call Chicago Meeting That Took Action

INSTRUCTING his Chicago attorneys to secure an injunction against the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture League, Sam Trigger, president of New York Local No. 1, and national vice-president for New York, last week fired the first shot in an inter-League fight that threatens to develop into a wide-open split. Trigger seeks to enjoin the League officials from carrying out the recent ousting of Louis Frank as manager of the coming Chicago Exposition.

Characterizing this action as "illegal and contrary to our constitution and by-laws," Trigger gives intimation of staging a pitched battle that is certain to make League affairs lively reading in the coming months. In addition to the grilling Ochs received last week at the hands of New York exhibitors, prominent New York and Chicago exhibitors are said to be planning a complete airing of the Frank case and other recent executive acts by means of impeachment proceedings.

Sonneschein, Berkson and Fischell are the Chicago attorneys, who have been retained by Trigger to take the League squabble into the courts. The New Yorker's telegram instructing his attorneys to start action, follows:

"I hereby authorize you to start suit and injunction proceedings against Louis Schindler, the National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and any person or persons who may attempt to usurp the authority of Louis Frank as manager of the Seventh Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held in Chicago at the Coliseum July 7 to 15, as I consider such action taken illegal and contrary to our National Constitution and By-Laws."

In substantiation of his claim that the action was illegal, Trigger declared that ten days' notice is necessary for an Executive Committee meeting, and places in evidence the telegram summoning him to the meeting, which he received only three days previous. The telegram, sent by Lee Ochs, declares: "National Committee meeting called for Chicago, Tuesday, February 6, and Ochs, Tugwell, Furniss, Jeup, Hamburger, Sweeney here now, and concur on the removal of Louis Frank. You will have to advance your own traveling expenses, as League cannot at this time. If you cannot come, wire your decision."

Trigger's reply was a direct-from-the-shoulder plea for a square deal for Frank, saying:

"Your telegram received, saying that Ochs, Tugwell, Furniss, Jeup, Hamburger and Sweeney concur on removal of Frank, so why call on me at this late hour. Am for a square deal for Frank, and know he will make a successful Exposition, and its finances we need. Can you get an exhibitor more capable? Owing to the short notice and important business engagements, cannot come. The break with Germany and absence of Lee Ochs from the city make it imperative that I remain."

Interesting sidelights on the hurry-call meeting are furnished by Trigger, who declares that Mr. Jeup was not in Chicago for the meeting as stated in Lee Ochs' telegram, and that Judge Tugwell was not on hand in response to an official notice, but that his presence in Chicago during the meeting was only accidental. In addition, Chicago exhibitors who declare that their local paid the expenses for the committee, are wondering at the statement to the contrary made by Lee Ochs in his telegram to Trigger.

General Film Company Elects Officers

The General Film Company, at the meeting of the board of directors, at the offices of the company, February 12 and 13, elected the following officers:

Benjamin B. Hampton, president; George K. Spoor, vice-president; W. M. Gulick, secretary and treasurer.

The list of directors of the company elected at the recent stockholders meeting is as follows: Benjamin B. Hampton, Frank J. Marion, George Kleine, G. A. Reeder, George K. Spoor, William N. Selig, Harold Bolster, Paul G. Melies and W. M. Gulick.

Farewell Party to Fatty

A farewell dinner was tendered Roscoe Fatty Arbuckle in Los Angeles last Friday evening by the Paramount exchange. Two hundred guests wished him luck on his Eastern jaunt. Many prominent exhibitors were present. Adolph Zukor and Walter Arbuckle were the principal speakers.

William A. Sherrill Resigns from Art Dramas

William L. Sherrill, president and one of the organizers of the Art Drama Corporation, has tendered his resignation to that company, to take effect February 17.

Griffith's Appointment of Powers Is Upheld

Wm. A. Brady Ignores "Improper Request" to Remove P. A. Powers from Censorship Committee—Powers Leaves for Coast

WILLIAM A. BRADY, president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, has upheld all of D. W. Griffith's appointments to his committee for "censorship from within."

Lee A. Ochs endeavored at the recent New York State exhibitors' convention at Albany to oust Powers from the Griffith committee. A resolution was sent to the Grievance Committee of the National Association, from Albany, urging that P. A. Powers be asked to hand in his resignation.

From a reliable source it is learned that Mr. Brady, indignant at this cool request, stated at a later meeting of the association that this request was considered improper, and it was accordingly tabled.

Mr. Brady upheld all of Mr. Griffith's appointments to the censorship committee, and he is said to resent the unwarranted interference which has occurred.

P. A. Powers left last Monday for California, where he will take active charge of the organization of a Pacific Coast Advisory Committee of the National Associaetion of the Motion Picture Industry.

Donald J. Bell, president of the Bell and Howell Company of Chicago, has been at the Coast for some time.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is on a tour of the country and will join Mr. Powers and Mr. Bell in Los Angeles.

The work to be done will include the bringing into a great advisory committee of the big producers of the Coast as well as the prosperous exchange managers and exhibitors. The first of the advisory committees was organized last fall in Chicago and Minneapolis followed suit some weeks ago. Mr. Howell is an active member of the Chicago committee and understands its activities and possibilities.

The Coast has been thoroughly stirred up through the activities of Judge J. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, who is a member of the Board of Directors of the National Association.

Metro Opens Chain of Offices in Canada

In line with its general policy of expansion, Metro Pictures Corporation is opening a chain of offices in Eastern Canada, in order to give the motion picture exhibitors of that territory the same complete, effective and high class service that is now supplied exhibitors in the United States.

The first of these offices already has been put in operation at No. 8 McGill College avenue, Montreal, and within a few days magnificent headquarters will be opened in Toronto. It is in response to a persistent demand for exclusive Metro features in Canada that the new chain is being formed.

Wm. Johnston Brings Libel Suit

Papers in a libel suit against Exhibitor's Trade Review, Inc., of New York City, brought by Wm. A. Johnston, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, were filed in the New York County Clerk's office on February 15, 1917. Mr. Johnston is suing for $50,000 damages on account of the editorials alleged to have been published by Exhibitor's Trade Review on January 20 and January 27.

Fairbanks Faces Suit for Breaking Contract

Injunction Blocks Plan of Athletic Comedian to Form New Company—May Be Sued by Majestic for $250,000—Emerson, His Director, Also Sued

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, who recently announced his affiliation with the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, may not be able to fulfill the terms of his new agreement, if the well-laid plans of the Majestic Motion Picture Company, his erstwhile employers, mature properly.

Just as the athletic Doug was about to step before the camera in his new producing company, the Majestic Company secured an injunction, claiming that he still has time to serve on his original contract with them, and that, in spite of his protests to the contrary, he is stilll legally in their employ. John Emerson also is involved.

At present Fairbanks is under injunction forbidding him to act for any other company, and is also facing a suit for $250,000, alleging breach of contract. A similar action has been brought against Emerson, asking $100,000 damages. Argument to make the injunction permanent will be heard before Justice Newburger, Tuesday.

According to the plaintiff, Fairbanks turned his back upon $2,500 a week to set up a company of his own. Emerson was receiving $750 a week.

The star's contract was made in October of 1915 and was to continue until October, 1918. He began his work at $2,000 a week, with the understanding that he was to receive an increase every six months until the maximum of $3,250 had been attained.

It was also stated in the contract that David Wark Griffith was to supervise each production, and that Fairbanks was to receive publicity as a star.

A violation of these two clauses, the defendant claims, caused him to desert the concern. In reply to this the Majestic Company says that when Griffith resigned Fairbanks did not protest against continuing his relations with the concern, but remained in their employ until January 4, when he informed them that he was about to leave. Furthermore, it is said that the star was influential in bringing about the engagement of Emerson to take Griffith's place.

The company also insists that Fairbanks was properly featured as a star.

H. E. Aitken, president of the Majestic Company, has submitted an affidavit setting forth letters he has received from Mrs. Beth S. Fairbanks, the actor's wife, manager and business agent. Mrs. Fairbanks complained in these that her husband was not receiving proper publicity.

In one of the letters, written at Kenneth Lodge, Watch Hill, R. I., she said: "No other light comedian or juvenile man of any importance have you to force against us," and then reiterated her wish that Fairbanks should get the publicity to which he is entitled. The plaintiff concern also alleges that Emerson was bound to them by an agreement which will not terminate until October 15. The date of the court hearing is not set.

"The Barrier" to be $1.00 Attraction

First Rex Beach Corporation Film Will Open at Broadway Theatre February 25—"Auction Block" Is Ready for Production—Larry Trimble Director

"THE Barrier," the first of the pictures to be released by the Rex Beach Corporation, will be given its premier at the Broadway theatre February 25, with $1 as the top admission price.

This decision has been arrived at following a consideration of various methods of distribution, among which the state rights plan was proposed and discarded.

"The Barrier," followed its opening at the Broadway theatre, New York, will be presented on a similar plan in other large cities. According to McFarland, who is handling the film, prints will be sent to the General Film exchanges in the various large cities, and the exchange managers will be authorized to secure large theatres for $1 showings, the contracts being made on the percentage basis.

Adrian Gil Spear, who arranged the scenario for "The Barrier," has completed an adaptation for the second Rex Beach play, "The Auction Block." Larry Trimble, who will direct "The Auction Block," has been engaged in selecting members of the cast for several weeks. Several studios are under consideration, and Mr. Trimble will make an announcement concerning the details of the production as soon as certain arrangements are completed.

Due to the success which Adrian Gil Spear achieved in "The Barrier," Mr. Trimble announces that he will be engaged actively in directing the production. It was suggested that Mr. Spear act in the capacity of assistant director. To this arrangement Mr. Trimble would not consent; so Mr. Spear's official title will be "co-director."

"The Auction Block" will be under way before the end of February. Mr. Trimble states that its length will be eight or nine reels.

Helen Greene Is Popular

Helen Greene is achieving a great deal of popularity in "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters." Miss Greene, although a youthful star, has had much experience both on the stage and screen. She played Love in "Experience," and has worked in the studios of Lubin, Metro, Mutual and Famous Players. She is at present under direction of Wm. Sheer.

Mayor Lunn Upheld

Supreme Court Justice Borst, on Monday, vacated the injunction restraining Mayor Lunn of Schenectady from interfering with Sunday motion picture shows.

New Color Process Is Shown to Trade

A NEW process of color photography will be projected before a trade audience at the Strand theatre, New York, Thursday morning.

The results of over a year of continuous effort to simplify and perfect the Prizma process were given their first showing at the Museum of Natural History on the evening of Thursday, February 8.

No one who was present on that occasion, and saw the size of the assemblage, which was so large as to require the performance to be repeated, can doubt that motion pictures in Nature's hues are an inevitable step in the artistic and scientific progress of the industry.

A wide variety of subjects were exhibited, to show the ability of the Prizma system to reproduce colors under all conditions of light and subject. Prominent among the longer subjects shown were those depicting the Grand Canyon and Niagara Falls. A number of other scenics were displayed, all the work of an artistic cameraman, in so far as composition and lighting were concerned.

It appears that the Prizma process reproduces natural scenery exceedingly well.

Although the exhibition at the Museum was undoubtedly a success, and evoked considerable interest, it has been decided by Prizma, Inc., to give another demonstration under conditions better suited to the requirements of high-class projecting.

The next exhibition of Prizma color pictures will, therefore, be given at the Strand theatre on Tuesday, February 20, at 11 o'clock A. M. Members of the various producing concerns, and the trade at large, will there have the opportunity of judging the capabilities of the new process.

Prizma natural color motion pictures are produced by methods and devices differing radically from the apparatus used by any other concerns making colorfilms, and a complete technical description of the process and its characteristics will appear in the Camera Department of the NEWS, issue of March 17.

Favorable Comment on First Subject of Creative Film

With the success of the Creative Film Corporation's big photoplay feature, "The Girl Who Didn't Think," assured, the details of its production are being discussed with interest in the motion picture industry, particularly among the many friends of Leon Wagner, Donald Campbell and Jack Weinberg, the three men who are most active in the direction of the company's affairs.

"The Girl Who Didn't Think," with its everyday story of types of people that are to be found in every hamlet, village, and city in the world, was chosen for production because it has been upon this very subject that some of the most enduring successes in fiction and the drama have been constructed.

Jane Gail, a great screen favorite in both America and abroad; Stanley Walpole and May Simon are admittedly happy choices to head the cast of principals.

Florida rights to this picture have been bought by Mr. Lazarus, of Jacksonville.

Federal Censorship Killed in National Legislature

Hughes Bill Will Not Be Passed—Senator Wheeler of Ohio Tax Committee Insists That Small Exhibitor Will Not Be Levied—Last Hearing of Committee Is Lively

TWO important legislative matters which directly or indirectly affect every exhibitor in the United States were brought last week. One is that the Hughes Censorship Bill will be killed in Congress; the other is that the Legislature of New York, if it does levy a tax on the film industry, will see that the small exhibitor is not made to suffer under the burden.

It is doubtful if, in the many official and unofficial investigations which have been made into the "fifth industry," that such exhaustive thoroughness has characterized the proceedings as that manifested by the Wheeler Committee.

Last week's session will likely be the last, although the Assemblymen will remain in New York for several days to settle a few minor questions.

The witnesses called last week were, for the most part, willing to reveal their "state secrets," although a little genuine drama was staged Thursday, when J. T. Morrison, of the brokerage firm of J. T. Morrison & Co. took the stand.

Morrison flatly refused to answer point blank questions, and he succeeded in arousing the ire of his questioners. Morrison represents the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company. Senator Wheeler confronted him with circular letters sent out by his firm, describing the fabulous profits to be made by investors. The witness claimed to have secured his data from Government statistics. He was unable to answer any other questions satisfactorily, and concluded his testimony by rebuking the committee for the harm, he alleged, they had done to his business.

Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the Metro Pictures Corporation, was the witness on Wednesday. He answered guardedly, and consulted the firm's attorney, J. Robert Rubin, frequently. Senator Wheeler criticized Rubin on several occasions, for his prompting, a charge which the lawyer politely but emphatically denied.

J. E. Broulatour, the New York, representative of the Eastman Kodak Company, testified Wednesday afternoon. He answered all questions willingly, with the exception of one which concerned his annual sale of raw film.

Albert E. Smith, of Vitagraph, and Walter W. Irwin, of V-L-S-E, were other prominent witnesses of the week.

One fact is certain regarding the finding of the committee, and that was emphatically stated to a representative of Motion Picture News by Senator Wheeler, and that is: the small exhibitor will not bear any tax burden.

Concerning the Hughes Bill, which has died a violent death in the hands of the committee, which had the subject of Federal censorship under investigation. The committee, in placing its findings before Congress, will recommend that an effective censorship is maintained in supervising the films which pass through the mails.

Narrow Censor Policy in Maryland Hurts Exhibitors

Maryland motion picture exhibitors are having troubles of their own with regard to the new Maryland Board of Censors. The Censors opened their office June 26, and according to their ruling all film released prior to that date and shown in Baltimore after January 1, 1917, had to be censored.

Recently a local exhibitor had booked an old film released prior to the opening of the Censors, and widely advertised the excellent qualities of the picture. The film was sent to the Maryland Censors, but as the exchange man neglected to send a check with it, the examination was held up. When the film did arrive the Censors maintained that the examination could not be made until all the film received at the office between the time of the arrival of the picture in question and the check for costs had been censored. They refused to even give the name of the films preceding the picture so that the exhibitor could rearrange a switch. It resulted in his being hurt considerably because of the loss of the show.

Australia Sees "Intolerance"

The first presentation of D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" in Australia took place last Saturday night at the Theatre Royal, Sydney, before a capacity audience. The newspaper reviews of the performance, according to cable reports, were even more enthusiastic than those accorded the initial performance of the "Birth of a Nation" in that city. On February 24 a second organization will open its engagement at the Theatre Royal, Melbourne.

"Down With Stars' Salaries," Says Hampton

President of General Film Company Denounces the Extravagance of Players' Incomes and the Producers of Raw Stock, in Memorandum to Tax Committee

ONE of the most thorough and detailed analyses yet made of the tax situation has been prepared by Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the General Film Company. The draft was presented to the Wheeler Film Tax Investigating Committee.

Due to the completeness with which each department of the subject has been handled, it is not possible in our limited space to quote Mr. Hampton's memorandum in its entirety. A few excerpts follow:

"One of the amiable weaknesses of human nature is the desire to appear well-to-do, to 'make a flash,' as the optimistic show people put it. Men grew rich in a few years in movies, and most of them did not hesitate to admit it. Likely they encouraged their press agents to 'admit' it, so that the average man believes that the movies roll in wealth.

"As a matter of fact, outside money has kept the industry active in the last two years. Stories of quick, easy profits have attracted scores of men, and capital from these sources has been used to produce pictures and distribute them at costs that are entirely out of keeping with possible returns.

"The purpose of this proposed special taxation is to raise money. If a geenral or horizontal tax is levied the result will defeat the purpose of the measure. Producers and distributors as a class cannot bear any new burdens. Taxation will be passed to the consumer in the form of increases in prices of admissions to theatres. Thousands of theatregoers will be unable to pay the increased price.

"A large percentage of small and medium size houses are now on the thin edge of bankruptcy. Any reduction of income will cause them to close their doors. Many theatres will be driven out of existence before the state can collect the tax and therefore, as a revenue measure, the plan will prove a failure.

"The only result will be to cripple—perhaps to ruin—one of our most useful industries, and to withdraw the only theatrical entertainment possible to millions of people.

"Pictures are now burdened by two sources of expense that are in themselves profitable enough to bear all the taxes that the state might see fit to levy on the industry as a whole. I refer to the cost of 'raw stock' and the high-geared salaries of professionals.

"All raw stock used by all picture producers, with perhaps one exception, is purchased from one concern. ('Raw stock' is the photographic film used in making both positives and negatives). This is probably the tightest, snuggest monopoly left on the American continent.

"If your commission would establish the fact of abnormal profits in the price of 'raw stock,' and could extract a proportion of the excess from the monopoly, you might obtain all the money you desire. If you should follow such a course the picture men would call you blessed—provided that this amiable monopoly did not promptly add the tax to the price of raw stock.

"Nothing in the world's history can compare with the craziness of the salaries paid in producing pictures. The men at the head of the producing and distributing companies and the owners of theatres are compelled to risk large investments in plants and organizations in order to make reasonable profits.

"But the actors and actresses are reaping a gorgeous harvest. An actress with an earning power of perhaps $20,000 a year on the spoken stage reluctantly accepts $100,000 a year in the movies."

Exhibitors Try Longer Runs With Surprising Success

"News" Campaign to Discredit the Wasteful Daily Program Change Finds Many Enterprising Exhibitors Willing to Try Innovation—Increased Box Office Receipts the Result—Movement Is Gaining Nationally

FATHER FRANCIS J. FINN, Cincinnati Jesuit author, says in a recent article on photoplays:

"The worst evil of the moving picture industry is, in my opinion, connected closely with the one-day programs. So evident is this evil that some of the big men interested in this momentous business are becoming alive to it. If we are to secure proper motion pictures for lovers of decency, the daily change of program must be done away with."

He suggests to societies and organizations generally that favor clean films:

"Do not allow your children to attend those theatres where there is a daily change of program.

"In the case of theatres which have two changes of program a week, let a committee of two or three men, representatives of various organizations, attend on the first day and make known, preferably through the press, whether the picture is suitable to the young."

That the representative exhibitor recognizes the value of the daily change for business as well as moral reasons is shown in a report from the Omaha correspondent of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Several theatres in the Omaha, Neb., territory tried recently, for the first time, longer runs; and now they will have nothing else. They are:

Empress, Grand Island, Neb.
Lyric, Norfolk, Neb. (formerly 2 days, now 3 days).
Wall, Fremont, Neb.
Majestic, Council Bluffs, Ia.
Roper, Council Bluffs, Ia.
Strand, Council Bluffs, Ia.
Magnet, Lincoln, Neb.
Besse, Omaha, Neb.

For a long time the exhibitors of Council Bluffs, Ia., have been a living example of what co-operation will do. Now, every Sunday and Monday, they join hands to show for two days. The Majestic shows only one-day pictures twice a week, on Tuesdays and Saturdays, and the Saturdays are children's matinees. The Roper shows a one-day picture only on Saturdays, the others are two days. The Strand runs two two-day pictures and one three-day picture.

Sunday Question Answered

And the Council Bluffs, Ia., theatres are among the most popular in this part of the country; they have no trouble whatever about Sunday closing, and they are making more money than the average theatre in a town of 30,000—especially when that town is practically a suburb of a city of 200,000.

Manager G. L. Adkins, of the Besse theatre, South Side, Omaha, Neb., has some new ideas about the longer runs.

"I think the downtown theatres must show daily changes," he said, "in order to satisfy a particular class of patrons that is growing daily. That is the class of people who eat their luncheon during the noon hour and then take in the 'movies,' or those who get out for an hour in the afternoon for that purpose. I count every day numbers of people who would no more miss the picture at my theatre than they would miss their luncheon at the cafeteria down the street. Then, drawing from the entire city as a downtown theatre does, it can get enough patronage during the other hours to keep going. The people stopping at the hotels for a few days go to the motion picture show every night.

"But the suburban house is a different matter. It seldom has the same patrons every night.

What Shirley Says

"What does Shirley of the Muse think about it?" has been the question of many Omaha, Neb., exhibitors, who were asked their opinions on the long run and daily change controversy. Manager Robert Shirley is in a peculiarly prominent situation as seen by the other exhibitors. The Muse, at Twenty-fourth and Farnum streets, is not a downtown theatre, nor is it a suburban house—it is a combination of the two. For this reason, exhibitors both from downtown and the suburbs watch the Muse, which is one of the finest theatres in Omaha. Manager Shirley shows first releases always—and the results at the Muse indicate the quality of the picture. Exchange men always wish it known when they book a picture at the Muse.

"I change three times a week, and, if a picture is worth it, I run it four days," he said. "The reason I do it is because I make more money that way. I look forward to the day when more theatres will be showing longer runs. That will mean fewer pictures and consequently better pictures—a great need in the motion picture exhibitor's business to-day.

"I am an extensive advertiser. I use every plan that any exhibitor uses, and I consider the mouth-to-mouth advertisement the very best kind on the market. I cannot do without the others, but this kind is the very best—it is twice as good as any other. By showing daily changes you lose this valuable kind of advertising.

Advertising That Pays

"For longer runs I want pictures that will make them talk. To make the most money, I must show a picture one night that will impress Mrs. Jones. When Mrs. Smith, from down the street, drops in the next day, Mrs. Jones will tell her what a fine picture she saw the night before. Talking with Mrs. Brown over the backyard fence, she will tell what a fine picture it was. Talking with Mrs. Black over the telephone she will mention the fine picture shown last night, and to be shown to-night. You have to show a picture that will impress Mrs. Jones so hard it will make her talk. If it just satisfied her, but doesn't make her talk, it is no good for a long run.

"There are four requirements for a good long run picture. First, a good title; second, the right kind of stars; third, a fine story; fourth, good, clear photography and projection. If I get a picture that merely satisfies my patrons and is not good enough to make them talk, I jerk it off—no matter for how long I have booked it—and put on another better one. The big trouble is, we have too few pictures that are good enough.

"I think under present conditions a few excellent daily changes are needed. I can not yet see the time when there will be no daily changes; but today the average exhibitor can make more money, and that is what counts, with a longer run. I have kept records time after time and, while I have many patrons who come three times a week regularly, I have yet to see the 'fan' who will come every night, but, at that, conditions are so often changing, that one cannot guess aright.

National Association Condemns Studio Fire-Traps

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, repudiated those members of the industry who, by neglect of fire prevention cautions, invite such disastrous fires as that which destroyed the studio of the Popular Plays and Players Company at 226 West 35th street, New York City, on January 30.

The committee on Fire Prevention Regulations and Insurance, meeting yesterday for the first time since this occurrence, had before it a letter from Fire Commissioner Adamson of New York City in which he stated that the vast amounts of film stored in the studio were absolutely without the permission or knowledge of the department and were handled in a manner at complete variance with regulations of the department.

This committee, on the basis of Commissioner Adamson's statements, adopted a set of resolutions, placing the National Association on record as condemning "most vigorously the handling of motion picture film in the premises of its members, and all others without endeavoring to obtain the necessary permit from the fire department and without maintaining the proper safeguards for the elimination of fire hazards and fire waste."

Denver Picture Men Will Aid Women Censors

Through the efforts of the Denver Vol. Mothers' Congress, a friendly agreement binding virtually every moving picture agent in the Rocky Mountain district to handle no objectionable films was entered into last week between the Film Exchange Board of Trade of Denver and the Denver district of the Mothers' Congress.

All eliminations made by the national board of review or by city inspector of amusements, a woman, shall be regarded as permanent eliminations according to the agreement.

Trade Honors Edison, Its Creator, on Natal Day

First Real "Feature" Made and Modern Conquest Subject Shown at Testimonial Banquet to "Father of Pictures"

A SHOWING of the first great "feature" motion picture ever produced was one of the striking features of a testimonial banquet that was tendered to Thomas A. Edison, in honor of his seventieth birthday, at Orange, N. J., by the employees of the Edison Affiliated Industries. The banquet to famous inventor, who devised the first motion picture camera as well as the first machine designed to project moving pictures on a screen, was given by the various divisions of the vast Edison industries, for the purpose of emphasizing the high regard in which Mr. Edison is held by those who are engaged in the production of the various devices that owe their existence to his rare genius and unremitting toil. The Edison studios of Bedford Park, N. Y., were strongly represented at the banquet and contributed largely to the entertainment that followed the dinner.

The affair was of decided interest to the motion picture world not only because of the showing of the historic first "feature" production, but because it marked the first public showing of Edison Conquest Pictures, new productions that have been made on lines laid down by Mr. Edison, and that represent his conception of ideal motion pictures. The contrast between the first actual photoplay ever produced and the new productions of the Edison studios was highly impressive.

The first feature production that ever was made, the picture that was shown last night, was "The Great Train Robbery," a photoplay that will be remembered by many of the pioneers in the film industry, and the forerunner of all Western thrillers. It was released November 30, 1903, and it marked a decided advance in the evolution of the silent drama. It was the first story with a definite plot to be produced as well as the first production to reach the length of one-reel. Previous to that time, only short subjects, ranging in length from twenty-five to three hundred feet, had been made. "The Great Train Robbery" was approximately seven hundred and fifty feet in length, a stupendous production for that era.

The popularity of the production is indicated by the fact that estimates show that it made approximately $400,000 for the Edison Company, a record that few productions have approached.

Four of the new Edison Conquest pictures, including a production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped," were included in the program. Motion picture authorities present were authority for statements that the new pictures are going to make a big advance in motion picture production.

Among the figures of prominence in the film world who were present were W. W. Hodkinson, who will direct the distribution of Conquest Pictures; George Kleine, of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, through which a series of five-reel Edison masterpictures are being released, and L. W. McChesney, manager of the Thomas A. Edison,. Inc., studios.

The divisions that united in giving the testimonial banquet to Mr. Edison were: The Motion Picture Division, of Bedford Park; the Musical Phonograph Division, the Storage Battery Division, the Dictating Machine Division, of Orange; the Primary Battery Division, of Bloomfield, N. J., and the Chemical Manufacturing Division, of Silver Lake, N. J.

Clark Pictures Indorsed as Better Type

In the rapidly growing campaign for better pictures the name of Marguerite Clark seems destined to play a greater and greater part, if the indications of public sentiment expressed through one of the great magazines hold true. For the last four months the Woman's Home Companion has been conducting a public forum in its columns under the editorship of Miss Helen Duey. In the January number of the magazine there are printed several letters which have been selected from the 37,000 received during the four months as being the most logical or as typifying the best that was received by the magazine. In all these letters, Marguerite Clark is the only star who is named as being representative of the best and cleanest in pictures, and it is said that the only production which is specifically mentioned in addition to those in which Miss Clark starred is another Famous Players picture.

As evidence of the position held by Miss Clark as an exponent of clean picture entertainment, indorsements of heads of schools in the south, where the dimunitive star recently filmed scenes for "Snow White," are cited. It was said that hers were the only picture to which pupils were permitted to attend without previous inspection by a member of the faculty.

Farrar's "Joan" Aids Sunday Cause in Albany

At the showing of "Joan the Woman" to Governor Whitman, his staff, the legislators and their friends at Albany, a straw vote was taken not only as to the picture, but as to the desire of those present to have the motion picture houses open on Sunday.

Out of a total vote of 502 at the evening performance, 425 were in favor of Sunday shows. Out of 232 votes at the morning matinee which was held to accommodate those who could not get into the hall the evening before, 186 showed a percentage of more than 84 per cent. of the people present and voting who desired motion pictures on the Sabbath.

Authorities who have seen the original signatures on these programs say that they consider this a strong argument in favor of Sunday opening, and that this straw vote, which includes the names of some of the most prominent Senators and Assemblymen and their wives, is not only a fair indication of the feelings of the people in Albany, but throughout the state.

Bronx Local Will Work with Clean Picture and Play League

"At a regular meeting of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association, Bronx Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of A. The following resolution was unanimously passed in reply to a request for co-operation of the members of this association with the Clean Picture & Play League of America, Inc.

"Be it resolved this association composed of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Bronx County go on record as being honored and pleased to co-operate with the Clean Picture & Play League of America, Inc., in its efforts to place the exhibitor and manufacturer of motion pictures on a higher plane, by the exhibition and manufacture of good, clean pictures, and that every member of this association must conform in every performance in his theatre or theatres to the highest standard of education and morality."

New War Film Popular

The Somme front, Lille and the Roumanian border form an important portion of the pictures showing in detail some things about war which are thrilling. The French villagers leaving their homes as the scourge of fire moves toward them, the funeral of Boelke, the intrepid aviator, and a personally conducted tour of Berlin as it is to-day, are some of the unusual features of the series, but they carry also their actual war interest, by showing how the moving army occupies itself.

Field Marshal Von Mackensen gave the camera men unusual privileges while on his great drive through Roumania, so that they secured scenes of military, as well as economic importance, which are nothing short of amazing.

Vita Launches Advertising Test

Cleveland and Ft. Wayne, Indiana, have been chosen by the Greater Vitagraph Company to test out the effect of a big advertising campaign in a large and a small city. The crusade which will be conducted through the newspapers and by handbills and billboards, is to extend over a period of six experimental weeks. In case the results are satisfactory, the plan will become inaugurated here and all over the country. E. Lanning Masters, advertising and publicity manager, and A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of Vitagraph, were in Cleveland this week to start the publicity wheel.

New Booking Office in Detroit

The Michigan Theatres Association has opened offices at 923 Peter Smith Building, Detroit, in charge of E. R. Bloom, formerly with the Metro exchange. This association is formed for co-operative booking purposes, and already has a dozen exhibitors as members. In addition, there will be co-operative publicity, all of which will be handled by Mr. Bloom. He announces that he has booked "The Girl Philippa" and "The Barrier" for all of the theatres in the association. The organization also expects to buy big productions on the state rights basis.

What Co-operation Has Done for Pictures in Milwaukee

By G. R. Radley

Editor's Note—A commission has solved the censorship questions for exhibitors, city officials and the public in Milwaukee. Everybody gets together whenever a problem comes up for decision, and the results in all cases are satisfactory to both sides. Exhibitors in communities where censorship is still in its feverish, fanatic stage will profit by reading this article carefully, and endeavoring to incorporate the principles of the plan in their own towns.

THE third annual report of the Motion Picture Commission of Milwaukee has just been made public, and in view of the widespread and vital interest which the subject of censorship is arousing throughout the country, it seems apropos to give an authoritative account of the formation of this Commission, the work which it has accomplished, the policies adopted, and in general to put at the disposal of the motion picture industry, information which may be useful in other communities, in preventing the evils brought on by autocratic legalized censorship.

The co-operation of Mayor G. A. Bading was secured, and a commission was appointed by him consisting of seven men chosen from representatives selected by a number of civic organizations. The men selected were one each from the City Club, the Bar Association, the Associated Charities, the Merchants & Manufacturers' Association, Union Labor, and two from the Exhibitors' League.

The name selected "Citizens' Commission on Motion Pictures" was to indicate that something different, something broader and more reasonable, was contemplated than found in the legalized "censorship" boards.

After its organization the Commission studied the standards of the National Board of Review, and finding them to be satisfactory, notified all the exhibitors and exchanges in this city that films which had been approved by the National Board could be shown without submission to the Commission.

Inspection Organized

To overcome this difficulty a schedule of inspection of the "first run" theatres was instituted, the Commission obtaining the assistance of about ten other persons who were personally known to have a suitable "judicial temperament," to act as aides, there being several women on this part of the Commission, so as to have the benefit of the woman's viewpoint, as well as her sometimes greater amount of spare time.

In making visits to their assigned theatres the individual members or aides are admitted by the showing of their badge, and in case anything is found in the films shown which does not seem to be in accordance with the standards of the National Board, or which does not conform to the policies adopted by this Commission, he is expected to present the matter to the manager of the theatre at once, giving his reasons.

In order to keep the records of the Commission in a business-like way each inspection is reported on a 3 x 5 card, mailed weekly to the secretary, giving the titles and make of the films constituting the program of the theatre on the date of his inspection, and of course notation of any action or recommendation found necessary.

Of the policies adopted by this Commission perhaps the one of the most fundamental importance—one which differs radically from that of many other Boards—is the belief, and the plan, that all motion picture entertainments must be sufficiently free from harmful elements so that they may be attended by all members of a family.

The first step in the development of this policy was brought on by the action of one of the down-town theatres showing a film portraying in a manner which would be fascinating to youthful minds, the adventures of a gang of gunmen in New York, but to forestall interference by the Commission a big cloth sign was put up announcing "Children Under 16 Not Admitted."

How an Evil Was Stopped

Several members of the Commission visited it in a body, and upon being seated, discovered that in the row just in front were two boys very evidently less than 16, and who, when tactfuly questioned, admitted as much. Upon reporting the facts to the theatre manager it was brought out that these newsboys had been admitted upon passes, the doorman apparently figuring that newsboys were so tough that a film of this character couldn't hurt them.

The reasons then for our being against the "Children Not Admitted" signs are:

(1) The immediate effect is to put a premium on untruthfulness, and to foster schemes of deception.

(2) The valuable spirit of comradeship between parent and child may be destroyed—for many parents were observed to send their children to some other place of amusement, or to tell them to wait outside while they went inside alone, thinking to see something which was "verboten."

(3) The unusual profits from the first appeals to unhealthy curiosity would be so attractive that other theatres would follow the lead—and soon a state of competition would exist all over town—with worse and worse films all the time being sought by exhibitors to keep it going.

(4) Who can draw the line as to whether 16 or 18 or even 21 is the time after which reason is so developed as to accurately counteract a false or pernicious appeal? What grownup, even, is immune to repeatedly presented deceptive suggestions, which, "seen too often, familiar with her face, we first endure, then pity, then embrace."

The carrying out of the policy to have all films such that they may, without real harm, be seen by children, has brought on some other interesting conditions; for instance, one theatre advertised a film (which had been approved by the Commission as suitable for showing to a general audience) "For Women Only," and then after a few days switched it to "Men Only," counting as has the circus showman, on the desire of the men to see what they think they ought not to see.

The Managers Agreed

Unfortunately in this case the manager was out of the city. When the manager returned he determined to fight. But the Commission did not fight in the manner which he expected—for instead of asking the Mayor to revoke his license and then calling in the police to close up the place, we called a conference of all exhibitors to meet the Commission in the Mayor's office.

The roll-call at this meeting showed that 40 out of 65 theatres were represented. The meeting was then turned over to the president of the Commission who explained the steps that had led up to the policy of having all programs clean enough so they might be safely seen by the whole "family." After discussion, a vote of the exhibitors resulted in a unanimous support of that policy.

The president then asked whether they were ready to back up the Commission in its policy of not attempting to segregate audiences, which meant that no sex or race or age or class should be prohibited from attending any public motion picture entertainment. And, after discussion the exhibitors voted their approval, it being significant that the manager who had hung out the sign "Women Only" was anxious enough to make amends by fathering the resolution.

The next question taken up was that of honesty in advertising, for instances had occurred where the wording used had been such as to be misleading. And the man who had used the words "We Have Been Arrested For Showing Audrey Munsen in 'Purity,'" (when the arrest had been because of a violation of the poster ordinance) was the one who proclaimed that no one would have cause to complain in the future about his advertising, and proposed a resolution condemning all forms of misleading statements.

The resolution was carried, and the meeting adjourned, with everybody feeling that this Milwaukee way was the best way to handle things.

Another matter about which the Commission has asked for the co-operation of exhibitors, is in regard to vaudeville acts.

Protection All Around

So the Commission has sent a letter to all exhibitors asking that when such other forms of entertainment are resorted to that they, for the good name of the industry, carefully scrutinize these acts and insist that the moral standard be at least equal to that existing in the films.

"Trade Paper Ads Make for Success"—F. L. Collins

McClure's President Credits Great Measure of "Sins" Success to Extensive Exploitation in Magazines of Trade

VINDICATION of extensive trade paper advertising, were any vindication necessary, is contained in the country-wide success of the McClure Series "Seven Deadly Sins," and a statement by Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Pictures that the line of demarcation between comparative and superlative success was crossed through enlistment of the balance of power held by the trade papers.

The producers have for months carried on a vigorous campaign of advertising in twenty-four magazines, fifty newspapers and a half dozen or more trade papers that appeal directly to the exhibitor. The amount so spent is claimed to exceed any previous total devoted to advertising of any motion picture.

"We have spent more than $35,000 on our trade paper advertising," said Mr. Collins recently. "I have assured myself by an exhaustive investigation that every line of this copy brought us added business. We started our trade paper announcements nearly six months before the release date of the first of the Sins, and shall undoubtedly adopt a similar policy in reference to our new series.

"Most producers hold the general idea that a month is long enough for any trade paper campaign to continue. Our long campaign has convinced me that the trade papers held the balance of power that has made 'Seven Deadly Sins' an overwhelming success when it might have been with a smaller trade paper campaign only an ordinary success.

"Our main idea in newspaper and magazine advertising was, of course, to interest the person who goes to the theatres—to make him eager to see our pictures. But, added to this we had to let the exhibitor know just what we were doing for him, and just what sort of productions and stars we had. We had to show him that he would make money with 'Seven Deadly Sins,' and we had to tell him why.

"We have done this. The way is paved for the salesmen, the market is opened purely by the big trade paper advertising. The exhibitor is practically booking these films long before the salesman begins talking.

"We are preparing to begin immediately upon the production of another series of five-reel features. We have been convinced of the value of the trade papers, and we shall demonstrate this in our next campaign. We know we have something the exhibitor is looking for, and we are not going to trust to luck that he will hear about it."

Chas. Giblyn Retorts to Critical Authors

Selznick Director Accuses Authors of Ignorance of Technicalities —Says They Must Learn Scope of Screen and Study the Art

CHARLES GIBLYN, formerly of Triangle and now directing the Clara Kimball Young productions for Lewis J. Selznick, let it be understood in an interview for general publication that he resents the criticism of authors, and that he dislikes having them tell him how to conduct his business.

"I have read much," said Mr. Giblyn, "from the outraged pens of story-writers who accuse us directors of every crime from assault and battery to mayhem and murder committed upon their manuscripts. It seems to me about time for one of us to take arms in our own defense.

"The trouble with the great majority of people who think they can write for the screen is their utter lack of technical training and their inability to visualize their stories in the terms of the motion picture. They seem to think that any story that reads well or any play that makes a deep impression on the stage is suited to the screen. Such an idea is ridiculous.

"One might as well say that all music is adaptable to the violin, piano and saxophone. Just as the skilled musician arranges his composition differently for the various solo instruments, so must the writer who prepares an idea for a book, the stage or the motion picture. The melody may be the same, but the accompaniment, the key in which it is played and the entire spirit of the composition must vary according to the medium through which it is to be expressed.

"No one can write a successful motion picture scenario who has not made a conscientious study of the art or has not had actual studio experience. The author who writhes in his chair at the picture theatre when he sees the child of his brain 'maltreated' by one of us directors would do well to attend the studio during the production of one of his pictures, and let the direcetor explain to him the necessity for the change he is making in the original script.

"Where we are going to get our big picture stories in future I don't know. It is the greatest problem the industry has to face today. In the past two months I have read eighty-four books myself and looked over reports on a hundred others, and out of the lot there were not more than two or three that could even be considered."

N. A. M. P. I. Issues Second Fire-Prevention Bulletin

The second of the Fire Prevention Bulletins of the National Association is about completed and will be issued within a few days. This new bulletin will be addressed to the men and women who actually handle the films in studios, exchanges and theatres, and is the natural follow-up of the first bulletin. This was addressed primarily to the managers of all places where film is stored or used, telling them not only what precautions to take, but why they should be taken.

The biggest reason for forming a co-operative commission is to protect both the exhibitor and the public from the quack-doctor who comes along with a state-rights prescription warranted to bring fat to a box office till. What cares he about the approval of the National Board?

Now let's see what it means to keep a curb on greed—to remove at least the big stones from the picture path of the youth of a city of 435,000. There are about 65 theatres. The nine downtown ones change programs 36 times per week, or 1872 times per year. Our records show that nine members and ten aides made 1773 visits during 1916. Seven film subjects were stopped entirely, while eliminations were made in 33 subjects. These figures are known—but no one knows what worse things might have been inflicted on Milwaukee's youth had it not been for the faithfulness of this group of persons who have sacrificed their time for the public good.

Does not every community have public spirited citizens who can co-operate with the motion picture men to secure like results?

Frohman Wants Volunteers for Actors' Fund Fair

Daniel Frohman, president, and Waldemar de Bille, executive director of the Actors' Fund Fair, yesterday (Thursday) called for 4,000 men and women volunteers to help with the preliminary work of organization as well as to serve during the ten days of the fair from May 12 to 21.

Mr. Frohman said there would be 150 booths at the bazaar and that the matter of their arrangement, fitting up, manning and equipping with merchandise were tasks, among others, that the officers hoped a volunteer army would undertake.

The fair offices are at the Hotel Astor, and any inquiries addressed to that hostelry will be promptly answered.

New Topical Film Company Is Organized in San Francisco

The Affiliated Film Companies, producers and distributers has been organized with offices in the Mills building, San Francisco. The purpose of the new concern, according to a letter received in this office, is to produce and distribute "something new in weekly releases."

The distinctive feature of the releases does not lie in their subjects, but in the method of treatment.

The company produces and distributes "Home Town News Weekly," "Beauty Spots of America," "How Things are Made," "Traveling in Your Seats," Living Cartoons, comedies, etc.

Mark M. Leichter, who is interested in the new concern, has sold his interest in the De Luxe Film Lasky Corporation to Mark A. Lasky.

The corporate name was formerly "Associated Film Company," which has been changed to the present name.

King to South America for Williamson Bros.

Braving the dangers of German U-boats and commerce raiders, which have been so active in Southern Atlantic waters recently, Stephen T. King, well known in motion picture and theatrical circles, sailed for South America last week on the Steamship Vassari, where he will act as special representative for the Williamson Brothers and the submarine Film Corporation in connection with the recently announced plans of this progressive concern.

Unusual interest was attached to the departure of Mr. King, due to the fact that the big Lamport and Holt liner was the first passenger ship to steam from an American port after the announcement of this country's break with Germany.

Mr. King will locate in Buenos Aires at the Hotel Cecil. Later he expects to make an extended tour of all the Latin-American countries.

M. P. Producers Elect Officers

The Motion Picture Producers Association has started its second year with the same officers who have successfully piloted the organization during the past twelve months. They were all unanimously re-elected as follows:

H. O. Davis, vice-president Universal Film Manufacturing Company, president; Thomas Ince, New York Motion Picture Company, first vice-president; D. W. Griffith, Fine Arts Film Company, second vice-prisident; David Horsley, Horsley Film Company, third vice-president; Frank A. Garbutt, Morosco Photoplay Company, treasurer, and W. J. Reynolds, secretary.

Herrington in Michigan

Fred J. Herrington, organizer for the National Association, has arrived in Michigan, and he expects to spend a month rounding up new members for the National, and incidentally helping the organization of the state association. He held a meeting of exhibitors at the Bryant Hotel, Flint, on February 14. He anticipates holding a number of community or sectional meetings while he is in Michigan.

Spokane's Commissioner Wants No Censor Bill

McBroom Takes Issue with Tacoma Censor Advocate Who Has Proposed a State Censor Law—"Our's Is Good Enough," Says McBroom

FREDERICK K. McBROOM, Commissioner of Public Affairs, Spokane, Washington, in a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, states that the State censor bill, proposed by F. H. Pettit, Commissioner of Public Safety in Tacoma, is not necessary, because Spokane's bill is quite sufficient.

Extracts from the letter follow:

"Spokane's present ordinances regulating films have been fairly effective. My own opinion is that to the extent that this business needs and should have regulation, that regulation can best be accomplished by a national board acting under authority of the general government supervising the production of pictures in the first instance, and leaving it to the cities of the country to add such further restrictions as local conditions and the moral tone of their communities warrant.

"An effort is now being made to have such a law passed by Congress, and so long as there is a chance for the passage of this law, it seems to me it would be better for the city and state to encourage this federal law, rather than make an effort at state regulation for, without a doubt the former would be more advisable.

"As to the measure proposed by Mr. Pettit, I do not think the public would long concede to any board, and especially one appointed in the manner provided in this act, whose appointment would be determined more or less by political considerations, limited in its membership and serving for small pay, the complete power sought to be given.

"It might be too liberal and it might be too severe, and with arbitrary power to forbid any film being shown in the state, that did not suit its individual fancy would mean that the act in its operation would either become very oppressive or a farce.

"This being my opinion I recommend that this council do nothing to further the passage of this bill."

Long Term Foreign Contracts on Frohman Feature

Within the past week, the Frohman Corporation has entered into contract with Bolton, Stuart Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of London, whereby that concern acquires the exclusive rights to all large Frohman productions for the territory of Great Britain for the period of two years. President William L. Sherrill has also concluded contract with the Co-operative Film Exchange, Ltd., of Australia, for the entire Frohman output for one year and with Joe Fisher of Cape Town, South Africa, for the exclusive rights to Frohman productions to the South African territory.

Bolton and Stewart began their activities with the six reel Frohman masterpiece "The Witching Hour," in which C. Aubrey Smith is starred. "The Witching Hour" will open, as a distinct attraction, simultaneously in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow and Dublin. The first shipment comprises seventeen prints.

The Co-operative Exchange have taken seven prints for the initial importation to the Australian territory, which comes close to a record for that territory.

Sunday Petitions Pour In

The campaign inaugurated by the National Association of Motion Picture Industry against Sunday closing in New York State is gaining progress. Petitions are pouring into the offices from all quarters of the state. The Marcus Loew theatre circuit is now using the slides calling for petitions, and the results from all parts of the city are excellent.

Hill, Not Bell

Lew Hill feels that reviewers should take more pains in spelling his name correctly. In Mutual's "The Turn of the Wheel," in which he appeared with Dorothy Davenport, our reviewer, spelled his name "Bell."

Warm Send-Off Is Tribute to "Little Mary"

Amidst cries of good wishes from an eager crowd that pushed and jostled to get a glimpse of "the world's sweetheart," Mary Pickford left New York City for Los Angeles where she will appear in several new Artcraft pictures.

Despite the precautions of Stationmaster Kramer, the news circulated that Mary Pickford was to leave on the Twentieth Century with the result that the immense crowd at the depot eagerly awaited her arrival. Although she reached the station in plenty of time "Little Mary" just barely escaped missing her train. Thousands crowded around her and many hands were stretched toward her to wish her a pleasant trip. Good naturedly the Artcraft star endeavored to answer every question, and had not Walter E. Green and Al. Lichtman of the Artcraft Company interfered she would surely have missed the train.

Static Club Plans Dinner to M. P. Directors' Association

The Static Club, composed of cameramen of the Los Angeles studios, gave a good fellowship dinner to members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, at the private dining rooms of the Angelus Hotel, Los Angeles, Thursday evening, February 15.

For the use of its members for experimental work, the club house of the Static Club in Los Angeles has been fitted with a complete dark room containing all modern appliances, also enlarging cameras; and later printers will be installed. Experiments may be conducted in the laboratories by the members privately, or in the presence of all those in attendance. The organization expects this laboratory will prove a great benefit to all members, and the industry will be served as well, and indications point to their expectations being fully realized.

Lists of Children's Films to Be Available

Renewed Interest in This Important Work—Washington Public Library Takes Up Movement—Illinois Congress of Mothers Offers Lists to All Theatres

THE children's pictures are coming for ALL theatres. We are getting nearer to a practical solution of the real problem behind the children's show, the securing of the pictures in fit condition for the first-class theatre to run.

The Washington Public Library has taken up in earnest this matter of selected pictures for children, and keeps an up-to-date posted list of films of this class, with the days of release and a synopsis of the play. The National Committee on Films for Young People affiliated with the National Board of Review furnishes the list to the library, which took up this service through the efforts of the Federation of Women's Clubs.

The Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent Teachers' Associations of Chicago, through their committee, of which Mrs. Michael is chairman, has an up-to-date compiled list of these subjects, which Mrs. Michael has no intention of keeping secret. She will be glad to have exhibitors and others interested write her at 5325 Indiana avenue, Chicago.

In these columns from time to time will be noted lists of pictures being shown in Omaha, Neb., where four theatres are now showing children's films, with more doubtless to follow.

And to those wishing a list to start and some valuable suggestions along these lines, "Juvenile Motion Picture News" offers a fine selection of children's pictures. This little book was published for the General Federation of Women's Clubs in New York last Summer, and several hundred copies are still available for free distribution by Mr. James S. Judd, managing editor, Juvenile M. P. News. Write him today for your copy.

Canadian Exhibitors Take Decisive Stand

Go on Record as Opposed to Present Contract Methods Employed by All Exchanges as Unfair—Prefer Federal Censorship

MATTERS of extreme importance to exhibitors everywhere were taken up by the executive officers of the M.P.E.L. of the Maritime Province of Canada the other day.

The decision was practically unanimous that the present system of forwarding contracts to the "head office" employed by all film exchanges now, was unfair, and action was taken refusing to sign such contracts. Hereafter all contracts presented to members of these associations must be executed on the spot by an accredited representative, or signed in advance by the exchange representative first, so as to become immediately binding when signed by the exhibitor.

Serial contracts must not be non-cancellable. If a serial proves interesting for only one or two episodes, there shall be no contract to bind the exhibitor to continue.

The federal plan of censorship was endorsed as against censorship by several Provincial boards, on the ground that story-value must be preserved, or picture audiences will be disgusted, and one board's excisions is enough.

"Percentage" paying was also condemned for "special features."

Those attending this important meeting included W. H. Golding, manager of the Imperial theatre, St. John and president of the League; G. J. B. Metzler, Empire theatre, Halifax, N. S., treasurer; N. V. Gastonguay, Orpheus theatre, Halifax, vice-president; F. W. Winter, Empress theatre, Moncton, N. B., vice-president for New Brunswick; F. G. Spencer, proprietor of a number of theatres throughout the Provinces, vice-president for Prince Edward Island, and S. C. Hurley, manager of Unique and Lyric theatres, St. John, secretary. R. J. Macadam of the Casino theatre, Halifax, N. S., and vice-president for Nova Scotia was unable to attend owing to illness.

The organization in this territory is in a flourishing condition with all members working for the common good.

Spokane Exhibitors Advertise Each Other's Shows

Advertising the other fellow's films is a nice little courtesy Spokane live wire managers are cultivating.

When a rival exhibits a film of particular merit a number of theatres devote a part of their space to boosting it in the newspapers. They figure it not only creates good feeling among the managers, but pays a deserved tribute to meritorious pictures and helps the game as a whole.

When "Intolerance" played at the Auditorium, both the Clemmer and the Liberty devoted display space to it; and other houses gave a hearty recommendation to "Civilization."

You couldn't get within half a mile of the Clemmer theatre, Spokane, while "The Pride of the Clan" was playing, without being apprised of the fact that something decidedly Scotch was in progress.

"Doc" H. S. Clemmer, manager of the house, booked two "Heelan'" bagpipers at the same time he did the film, and put them to work in the lobby. The nights got chilly and the gooseflesh crept up around undraped knees, but the hardy "Scuts" piped some mighty big crowds into the house.

This Kind of Live Wire Carries "High Voltage"

Powd McLuen, McLuen theatre, Guthrie Center, Ia., does not believe in doing things by halves. After running several readers in the local papers describing new styles (as if they were Mrs. Castle's ideas); getting the local drug stores to feature in window displays "recommendations" of their goods by Mrs. Castle; inducing the local shoe store, dry goods emporium, and last but not least the purveyor of phonograph dance records to boost Mrs. C., issuing free tickets, stickers, tack cards, and half-page ads. in the papers with admission coupons, he writes to Manager L. A. Sheridan, of the Pathe Exchange, Des Moines, to know, as he says, "not how good my ideas are, but how rotten."

Can you beat it?

We hope next time Mr. McLuen puts a big one over he will take us, too, into his confidence. And we would like to have his opinion on some of the ideas expressed in Motion Picture News Live Wire Department. Any man who asks to be told just how far he needs to go to make the best possible record, is a good pacemaker for the next man. You can bank on that.

N. J. Exhibitors Thank Samuels

A vote of thanks to F. E. Samuels has been spread upon the minutes of the New Jersey Branch of the M. P. E. L. A. for his activity in behalf of the ball given by the New Jersey exhibitors on February 1, in Newark.

State Convention at Little Rock, Arkansas

The fourth annual convention of Arkansas exhibitors was held in Little Rock, Ark., on Monday and Tuesday, February 5 and 6.

Election of Officers.

President—S. S. Harris, Gem theatre, Little Rock, Ark. Crystal and Royal theatres.

Vice-President—E. H. President, Electric, Russellville, Ark.

Secretary and Treasurer—Aaron Laskin, Kempner, Little Rock.

The meeting was harmonious and most satisfactory.

After due discussion of the advance deposit system, a resolution was adopted that the Arkansas exhibitors refuse to pay advance deposits.

Resolution passed that the members of this association pledge themselves not to show any pictures not passed by the Board of Review.

Expressions upon the censorship bill now pending before the legislature developed that the consensus of opinion was that the state does not need such a law, that it ought to be defeated. As an indignant movie fan put it, "This here censorship bill is like the appendix. No one has ever found out any use for it. It's a constant source of irritation, increases the expense account, and ought to be cut out."

In a review of the fortunes and ills of the picture men it developed that pictures were not furnished at uniform rates, according to the size of the towns. This will probably result in the establishing of a booking office, so that pictures may be had at same prices in towns of like population.

An Anomalous Situation

Exhibitors in the smaller towns expressed satisfaction with the past year's business. On the other hand, the exhibitors in the larger places claimed that although no complaint could be made of the houses, business has not paid. This on account of the high price for features. It looks as if the high-priced feature will be taboo in Arkanses. Also in the larger towns the motion pictures have been adding vaudeville to their program, admission remaining the same, thus enhancing the expense while the returns remain in statu quo.

An elegant banquet at the Hotel Marion was a most pleasing part of the assemblage. But—one veteran of the movies expressed the regret of all when he sadly commented: "Believe me, friends, Arkansas is sure bone dry."

Convention adjourned to meet at Little Rock in May next.

E. H. Butler, who is a pioneer in the motion picture business in Arkansas, in 1909 opened his show house in a portion of a small store building in the town of Russellville. He was by turns ticket seller, operated the films, started the machine piano, put out his advertising. As the business grew, he sold a half interest to a Mr. Howell for $450, but several months later decided to buy Mr. Howell out, and paid $1,600.

From this humble start has grown a splendid business. The Electric theatre, with seating capacity of 400, and an air-dome of about the same capacity in connection with the theatre.

Mr. Butler is a progressive man and keeps pace with his business. During the coming summer Mr. Butler will erect the best playhouse between Fort Smith and Little Rock.

The structure will be devoted entirely to the motion theatre. It will be two stories, with theatre offices, posting rooms and operating rooms above. There will be rest-rooms for ladies and men. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 600, while the balcony will seat 200. There will be a smokers' paradise in the balcony.

Mr. Butler is studying plans with a view to making his new theatre perfect from an artistic and architectural standpoint.

"Why Not Improve the Breed?" This Exhibitor Asks

IF we can induce exhibitors everywhere to give serious thought to the present condition of things in this industry, if we can make exhibitors in large enough numbers realize that there is something radically requiring change before the best interests of the film business are fulfilled, we will have "started something."

Therefore we publish this week a letter from an exhibitor suggesting that a clean-up from within is due, and due mighty soon. Let him tell it:

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

One cannot pick up a trade publication without being confronted with some suggestion from maker and exhibitor for the betterment of the film product. There is no question that there is always room for improvement there, but it will occur to the real student of conditions that there is vast room for improvement in the breed of the exhibitor himself.

This is one of the most legitimate and cleanest callings open to the many with small capital, yet it is singularly "blessed" with the greatest number of incompetents of any business that one can pick out in a day's search.

This is not a tirade against any community, or a kick on the other fellow, but everything in the motion picture industry points to the fact that the makeup of the exhibitor rank is woefully lacking.

The deposit system is one result of this. There is no other business in the world where there are so many unhealthy accounts as in the picture industry, and it is a shame to be compelled to admit the same.

If there was a wholesale cleaning out of the exhibitor who just opens his doors and later "totes" his films to and from the express office, with the thought that this is all he need do to fulfil his duty to his calling, there would be a brightening of the business that would startle us all.

The film exhibiting end of the industry was taken up by men who grasped at it as a means of easy money when it started, and the real showmen who were that time identified with the so-called "legitimate" scoffed at the thought that the "nickel" business could ever amount to more than it indicated in its infancy. The breed of exhibitor was bad to start with. It is only within a very recent time that the man with brains and money has been led to see the possibilities of the exhibition end of the game, and now the change is taking place, but the end is not yet anywhere in sight.

For example, in a western city a recent passing of a prohibition law drove the saloons out of existence. Several men who had conducted liquor stores and who held leases on good locations went at once into picture exhibition. There could be but one result. They were men who were in no way fitted for the business. Men who held no place in the community councils; and, failing to reap the rich harvest they expected from opening the doors of a picture show, they are ready to resort to anything to make up the deficit.

To such a class of exhibitors, as well as to the unthinking, the "white slave," "sex lure," and kindred pictures owe their very existence. And it is this class of exhibitor who must be shuttled out of the business before there will be no demand for advance deposits and so-called guarantees.

The man who stands on the outside and sees the sidewalk lined with people trying to obtain entrance to a picture show thinks it is all gravy. He thinks there is nothing to it but to open the doors and take in a wad of easy money. He is not keen enough to know the other side instinctively, for if he were a business man he would sum up the cost of operation before he jumped into a business he knows nothing of and is disqualified by nature and everything else to conduct properly.

Of course, there will be the man who will ask "how are we to eliminate the undesirable?" There are as many ways as there are methods of determining the fit in any other game or occupation.

Men do not start clothing stores or auto factories, or jewelry shops, who have never had a day's experience, just because they think the business is all beer and skittles. Let's all help improve the breed of the exhibitor and many of our troubles will vanish with the passing of the unfit.

Almost Any "Campaign" Pays

Lately we have received through our correspondents many optimistic indications that pains and thought behind a good picture are sure of winning success anywhere, even in these days of disturbed business, and past results in this direction are but marks of best indication for the future.

The latest from the Rialto, Baltimore, was a campaign of post-cards on Bushman-Bayne, "The Great Secret." This house has a big mailing list and uses it, as all houses with a real mailing list do, to very great advantage. Two weeks before the coming of the picture the first post-card went out. A week later the second. And the day of the showing of the picture a third "personal" reminder was sent. A continuous, but not extravagant campaign in the papers and a good lobby display, carried the serial over with overwhelmingly big opening, and good business for the next following episodes.

All of which goes to show that almost any well-thought-out campaign where big business means a big return worth the extra effort, will get the people coming to a theatre. Have you really planned a "campaign" in this way? Try it. Begin at least two weeks ahead and don't let up until it's all over. Make every boost count as carefully as if you were planning a single knockout. Imagine you are working by a "scenario" where every scene has to fit every next scene. Be a "director" of advertising for yourself, for once and produce a "feature" where you have been using "single reelers" heretofore.

Four Children's Shows Every Saturday Now in Omaha

Children's shows are spreading, and the rapidity with which this is happening where the right kind of stimulus is offered is well illustrated in Omaha, Neb. Each succeeding Saturday sees greater crowds of kids at the children's matinees, which have now spread to four theatres and promise to include a number more before the city's capacity is reached. From every section of the city are coming demands for children's matinees. Community clubs, mother's clubs in certain sections of the city, and improvement clubs of various kinds are sending in demands for the matinees, and exhibitors are arranging to accommodate them. For the guidance of other exhibitors interested in the special matinees, it might be well to point out that in the following programs, all selected under the direction of the Omaha Woman's Club Censorship Committee, the children expressed more delight over the Muse program than any other. Omaha's latest program:

Muse—Marguerite Clark in "Little Lady Eileen"; a comic, "Boddy Bumps and His Pointer Pup"; a cartoon and a scenic.

Strand—"Second Best," Baby Marie Osborne in "Twin Kiddies"; and a scenic, "Climbing Mont Blanc."

Boulevard—"Boy Scouts"; a comic, "The Bear Idea," and a travelogue.

Besse—"Battle Hymn of the Republic"; a comedy, "Jones Keeps House"; a nature study, "Native Birds," and a travelogue, "Seeing South America."

The programs can be changed from theatre to theatre, as different crowds of children attend the different theatres. Capacity houses were reported by every theatre, many mothers attending with their children.

Stanley "Ad" Aimed at Pennsylvania Censor Rich Wit

Stanley's Palace theatre, Philadelphia, recently has been amusing the theatre public with attention-compelling ads which are "little but they're loud."

His first "ad" was a teaser, and said:

All Next Week
CHARLIE CHAPLIN
In the first presentation of
"EASY STREET"
This is the famous comedian whom
Dr. Oberholtzer
Secretary of the State Board of Censors
Declares
IS A FOOL!
He admits it.

When Charlie arrived on the screen Publicity Director Einsteen came out with the following:

DR. OBEHOLTZER
Secretary of the State Board of Censors
Declares That
CHARLIE CHAPLIN
IS A FOOL!
This censor receives $2,400 per annum
Chaplin receives $2,400 Every Day!
See Chaplin in "Easy Street"
"WHO'S WHO?"

We don't see why this sort of advertising would not be suitable even outside the state of Pennsylvania. The light of publicity certainly is penetrating. And it needs something to penetrate some censorship minds.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—Washington: Lawrence Day, manager of the Metro Exchange, has purchased the Onyx theatre of Newport News, Va., and is offering long-run feature programs. The house is centrally located and has a capacity of 750. It stands as one of the most popular in Newport News and since Mr. Day's control has greatly increased its business. "There is no reason," remarked Mr. Day, "why the exhibitor should not have good box-office receipts. With the excellent material on the market to select from, a consistent program, reasonable business methods, attention to the comforts of his patrons, judicious advertising, and an attractive lobby display, the exhibitor has the controlling factors of a money-making business in his own hands."

ILLINOIS.—Sullivan: A deal was recently closed in which Frank Stanley disposed of the Garden Theatre, Arthur's popular picture show, to Willard Fleming, who took charge at once.

Mr. Stanley and family left Tuesday for Rocky Ford, Colo., for a visit with his brother, Int Stanley, formerly of Lovington, who is in poor health. Later he expects to embark in the picture business again in some larger city.

Casey: The Orpheum theatre, formerly owned and operated by Amos Roberts, was sold a few days ago to J. A. Rooksberry of Carlyle, Ind., who immediately assumed the management and intends to run a strictly up-to-date motion picture house.

IOWA.—Des Moines: D. B. Lederman of Des Moines, Ia., new district manager for the Universal, paid his first visit to Omaha as manager the other day. He is optimistic over the business outlook.

Alton: George Dethlefs, proprietor of the Crystal theatre at Alton, Ia., has put in new chairs, redecorated his place and reconstructed the lobby to give it better display advantages.

Onawa: Fairchilds and Paine, proprietors of the Royal theatre at Onawa, Ia., recently redecorated the lobby of their theatre. The walls were painted white, with a creamy tint. They had stencils of flying birds made and painted them in blue all over the walls, giving a beautiful Bluebird effect. They show Bluebird features.

KANSAS.—Abilene: Howard Collins, of Solomon, Kans., has leased the Seelye theatre here, and will dispose of his other theatre properties and locate in Abilene.

MISSOURI.—Gallatin: Victor Newton, formerly of the Newton Supply Company, of Des Moines, Ia., has recently purchased the Isis, Gallatin, Mo. This theatre was formerly owned by J. S. Turck. Mr. Newton was in Kansas City recently arranging for films, and, among his contracts, was one with the Paramount for three days' run each week.

Senath: Alvin Chapman, Dixie theatre, Senath, Mo., was obliged to close his theatre on account of an epidemic of measles and small-pox.

Kansas City: S. E. Greebaum, manager of the Garden theatre of Denver, Col., was in Kansas City Friday, February 9, on business. This theatre is one of a string owned by the Garden Theatre Company of which A. H. Blank of Des Moines is president.

Mr. H. Gilensky, special representative of the K. E. S. E., attended the Motion Picture Men's convention in Oklahoma City, recently.

Several private showings of the Max Linder comedies have been made in the last few days in Kansas City and the exhibitors who reviewed them are very much elated over this first issue.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., of the Pathe Exchange, attended the Motion Picture Men's Convention in Oklahoma City, Okla.

J. Marshall, Marshall theatre, Manhattan, Kan., visited the Pathe lately.

Wichita: Frank Garrety, Wichita, Kan., has bought the Wonderland theatre.

Chilhowee: Little in size, but big in the affairs of his town, B. W. Howard, of Chilhowee, Mo., rushed into Kansas City recently. Howard's theatre is the Star and he shows Paramount pictures two nights a week.

Salina: Herbert J. Thatcher, Salina, Kan., Strand theatre, received the first Max Linder contract issued in the Kansas offices of the K. E. S. E. Contracts are coming in very nicely, in fact far beyond expectations.

MONTANA.—Meadville: Victor Olson has taken over the Grand theatre here, having purchased same from John Hoem. His first showing, Chapter 1, of the "Sequel to the Diamond from the Sky," crowded his house and it would appear that a great success is assured him.

NEBRASKA.—Broken Bow: The Lyric theatre, Broken Bow, a picture of which was printed in a recent issue of the "Motion Picture News," has just announced an increase in price from 5 and 10 cents to straight 10 and 15 cents.

North Platte: Exhibitor L. B. Norton has bought the Old Pat's theatre at North Platte, and has booked first run Universal program, with features one day each week.

Oakland: H. A. Larson, exhibitor at the Majestic, Oakland, writes that his Tuesday night business has been increased seventy-five per cent since he began making that his "Bluebird Night."

Omaha: The Princess theatre, Fourteenth and Douglas streets, Omaha, has installed new chairs and two new type S Simplex machines.

"The Right to be Happy," is a popular picture in Omaha, and its territory, with churches, children's matinees and other special occasions where a good, happy, clean picture is demanded. The Rev. C. E. Cobbey, pastor of the First Christian church, Omaha, showed the picture on one of the "Worth While Friday Night" programs given in his church. He was greatly delighted with it and gave Manager Calvert of the Omaha Bluebird exchange a hearty indorsement of it.

"Pigeon Island," shown at the Sun theatre in Omaha, made a big hit with the crowds that saw it. It was one of the best mouth-to-mouth advertised pictures shown in Omaha for a long time. Many people had read the serial story in a magazine and others had read the book. All went to see the picture. When they told their friends about the beautiful ocean pictures, their friends went, too. Manager Goldberg showed the picture two days, and wished he had shown it three.

The Farnam theatre, Fifteenth and Farnam streets, Omaha, Neb., is closed temporarily following a fire. Proprietor Joseph Kohlberg is taking advantage of the opportunity to redecorate as well as to repair his theatre.

W. A. Waterman has left Omaha to be the organist at the Sterling theatre, Superior, Neb.

After a year in Nebraska, "The Birth of a Nation" is still going well, with the aid of full page advertisements in the papers, in the towns and cities it makes. The prices being charged are 25c, 50c, 75c and $1.00. It returned to Omaha for a week on the anniversary of its first appearance there, and drew greater crowds than ever before.

Syracuse: D. C. Beyette of Syracuse, Neb., has installed a motor generator and two new machines in his theatre.

Scotts Bluff: A deal was closed last week whereby Harry DeBuque of Alliance became the owner of the Queen theatre of this city, Mr. Bucy selling all his interests in the same to DeBuque. It is understood that Mr. Rodell of this city will be the local manager of the theatre when it is again opened. The building has been closed for a few days, and it has not been announced as yet when it will be opened. Dates for the opening will be announced within a few days.

NEW YORK.—New York: Herman F. Jans, president of the New Jersey Metro Film Service, 71 West Twenty-third street, accompanied by Mrs. Jans and their ten-year old daughter Mildred, soon will leave for an extended tour of the South. This will be the first vacation Mr. Jans has taken since he entered the film industry.

Mr. Jans and his family will go direct to Jacksonville, Fla., and from there will visit St. Augustine, Ormond, Daytona, Palm Beach, Miami and, if time permits, Key West and Havana, Cuba. On the return trip they will stop at Tampa, and also at Savannah and Atlanta, Ga.

Miss Jans will leave the public school to make the trip with her parents, and on her return will take up studios in a private school at Maplewood, N. J. As planned, the entire trip will take about a month, but Mr. Jans says he is not bound by schedule and will take as much more time as may be necessary to see and to enjoy the Southland in its entirety.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—Mitchell: A. J. Dix, manager of the Gale theatre is taking steps to make extensive and desirable changes in his playhouse, which he expects to have under way in the near future. He has signed a 10-year lease on the building, which will be extended to the alley. The floor will then be lowered to the street level and slanted to make every seat a desirable one.

The stage is to be attractively designed and opera chairs installed and a modern heating and ventilating system will be added. He expects to have all alterations made by May 1.

ONTARIO.—Toronto: James Norris, formerly manager of the theatre in Bracebridge, was in Toronto recently and stated that he was open to purchase a house in this city. Mr. Norris was very successful in the northern town, and is a first-class progressive exhibitor.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

Old Theatrical Idea Adapts Itself to Serials

We illustrate herewith a "free ticket" idea that strikes us as worth careful consideration. It is simply an adaptation of the time-honored something for nothing schemes which have been played up in theatrical circles since time immemorial.

A ticket admitting TWO to the first episode of a serial.

There is always a question whether it is good policy to fill your house with pay-nothing patrons on an opening performance in the hope that some of them will come back. The picture theatre usually runs to capacity at certain times of the day and a general "free ticket" distribution is bad in a dozen different ways, besides cheapening the theatre and injuring the competitor, who is going to come back at you sooner or later with the same thing to injure you IF IT PAYS YOU.

The "two-for-one" ticket, starting a serial, is legitimate, however. Your competitor should feel very little the rush of patronage to your house, and you get by this scheme bona fide pay patronage—if not your regular class of patronage, it is the cheaper patronage which you want to educate to your prices, but find so hard to get into your house even the first time. A serial is the psychological thing to draw them in with. We would like to hear from every exhibitor who tries this simple little idea. Will you please write the "live wire editor" about it? We want to know how the second and third chapters hold up when you use this idea to get them coming at the start.

Uses Scenario Writer

Have you any local scenario geniuses? If so, read this: Exhibitor Kelley at Beatrice, Nebraska, found a local genius. He invited this man and all his relatives to a special party in his honor, at the theatre. The local papers took it up as a local interest item, and the curiosity seekers were all there, to see the local celebrity and his picture.

F. J. McWilliams Claims to Be Inventor of Potato Matinee—Has Brand New "Sequel" That Every Exhibitor Should Try

WE "started something" in a recent issue when we asked "Who started the potato matinee?" as will be seen by reading the following letter. Read on, without fail, because he has a brand new idea he springs that will revive interest in this form of business getting.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
Gentlemen:

In the current issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS there appears—on page 875—in the department headed Live Wire Exhibitors an article under the caption "Who Invented the Potato Matinee." The article states that the Princess theatre at Boone, Ia., had just pulled its seventh annual potato matinee.

The Princess theatre is mistaken in the number of "annuals" as the potato matinee was originated in the brain of the writer about six years ago. It happened as follow: The Vitagraph Company had released a picture called "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The writer had it booked. We had for opposition a street carnival and we were starving to death. I had seen "The Battle Hymn" and knew it to be a wonder, and was at a loss to hit upon a scheme to advertise it so as to make a killing.

There is a psychological time for all things—a secret of successful advertising. At the time in question potatoes were selling for $2 per bushel. I one day read an item in the "B. L. T." column of the Chicago Tribune, where a fellow in Nebraska entered a saloon and called for a cocktail, and after drinking it laid on the bar a potato. The bartender looked at the fellow for a moment, then picked up the potato and tossed it in the register, rang up 15 cents and tossed out 10 cents change. That gave me my idea and I went to work on it. I advertised an advanced admission charge for "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and stated that the prices would be as follows (for the matinee only): Children one potato—small size. Adults: one potato medium size. Also in order not to deprive the poor people of an opportunity of seeing the picture, those who could not afford potatoes would be admitted for the customary cash admission of 10 cents. I took in seven bushels of potatoes at the matinee, also $11 in cash, and at night I played to $84, whereas I had been playing to $10 or $12 per day during the street carnival. My idea was to get the children and send them out advertising the picture to their families.

I will bet Mr. Princess, Boone, Ia., a new hat that he copied the idea from the writer.

It may interest you to know that I improved on my original idea a very short time ago. I was to start a serial "The Lass of the Lumberlands." I wanted a good start and didn't want to give a free show. As potatoes were again selling for $2 per bushel I hit upon the idea of admitting children for one potato and adults for two potatoes and at the same time advertising that on the following Tuesday (a very dull night) I would give away to my patrons all of the potatoes taken in Saturday (the day I started the serial). I took in ten bushels of potatoes and on the following Tuesday I put on only one show, and in a house seating 439 I took in $64 in cash, thereby getting paid for my opener on the serial and also for my Tuesday night show. Possibly some one will claim credit for this idea.

Am enclosing clipping from a local paper describing my FIRST potato matinee. Kindly return the clipping as it belongs in my scrap book.

Yours very truly,
F. J. McWILLIAMS

"Special Sale" of "Poor Little Rich Girl"

Tying up the book and the play is going to be a money-getting fact, not a theory, if exhibitors take advantage of the latest Artcraft idea in promotion of "Poor Little Rich Girl."

A special edition has been published which will be offered on "special sale," wherever the exhibitor has enough energy to get his local department store or book store to join with him in a mutual fifty-fifty sure profit plan.

The book is illustrated with scenes from the play. Exhibitors should not forget that EVERY sale of the book means one SURE patron of the play, and by actual calculation probably five patrons to every book sold, as a direct result of the talking about the story and play by the one who is so enthused as to have purchased the book.

A dozen methods of reciprocal co-operation might be suggested between the store and the theatre, but simply timing the "book sale" and the play date together is the big thing. Grosset and Dunlap are the publishers.

Conventions for Omaha Houses

Omaha theatres as "convention meeting places" is the latest. The Sun theatre entertained the Lumbermen, 600 strong, the other day, and the Muse claims equal share of honors because it entertained the Hardware Men's convention.

Shows What Can Be Done with Local Opera House by Knowing the Game and Taking Advantage of Big Pictures Now Offered

WE think every exhibitor who reads the attached letter will take his hat off to this man from Pennsylvania who knows how. We say he knows how because the up-stairs opera house is not adapted to pictures unless it has a showman running it. And the evidence is there all right that Mr. Woodin and his little wife, whom he says "is some hustler and knows the game as well as myself," are show people who have kept "coming" as the business changed from "legitimate" to "pictures."

MOVING PICTURE NEWS:

Enclosed picture is an old-timer. Taken ten years ago. I have been in the business now twelve years. The enclosed photo is of the "Casino," which was in Orwigsburg, Pa. It was the second show I conducted. It seated ninety.

There were no posters in those days.

I have come right along with the business, due to the fact of seeing ahead and discarding old methods. I now use thirty inches of daily newspaper space and I have the billboards in all parts of the town, and in surrounding towns also.

I use around $20 worth of paper on a feature like "The Fall of a Nation," "The Battle Cry of Peace," "Romeo and Juliet." From the five-cent business of twelve years ago I have jumped to a $2,000 business in two days on "The Birth of a Nation." I have even had the railroads here put on special trains for pictures. Admission prices are five, ten and fifteen cents.

Here is another tip for live exhibitors who are trying to work up the children's end of the business. Put on two-cent matinees and see your house fill up; not only will the children come, but they will bring the adults along also. Your gross will run four times its normal amount.

Give a good show every day, and every two weeks make a drive on a big production at twenty-five cents (or more) admission, with such pictures as "The Spoilers," "Ne'er Do Well," "Fall of a Nation," "Romeo and Juliet," "Crisis," etc., and don't be afraid to spend $25, $50, $75 or $100 for a good production.

The business is better today for the live exhibitor than it ever was. But you must do things in a big way. Old-timers will remember me. I started in Orwigsburg, Pa., twelve years ago, then built the "Euclid" in Sch. Haven, Pa.; also conducted the "Lyceum theatre" in Montgomery, Pa., and the "Majestic" here in Towanda, Pa., and for the past three years have had the "Keystone Opera House," Towanda, Pa., and have built up a reputation for giving shows second to none in northern Pennsylvania.

The MOVING PICTURE NEWS is always eagerly awaited every week. Every live exhibitor should have it.

Yours for success,

WILLIAM L. WOODIN.

SPARKS AND FLASHES

An up-state New York exhibitor pulled a clever deal the other day with his local druggist. The latter had been conducting a voting contest, one vote with each 25 cent purchase. The exhibitor had a serial that needed reviving. The druggist donated 500 "votes" to the theatre, which gave away a vote with each ticket. The druggist's contest got a boost, and so did the theatre.

"Charity" (Mutual) filled the Monroe theatre, Omaha, for three days to capacity, when squads from several local charitable organizations sold the tickets to the show on "percentage." But the "live wire" stunt was getting "interviews" on the teaching of the picture from the enthusiastic workers, published in local papers as live news.

More slogans: Gilbert, Beatrice, Neb., "Quality Counts"; Majestic, Council Bluffs, Ia., "Home of Paramount"; Strand, Council Bluffs, "Theatre Comfortable"; Roper, Council Bluffs, "Always Good Pictures"; Empress, Grand Island, Neb., "Always Ten Cents"; Lyric, Norfolk, "The Wonder House."

The Gem theatre, Plattsmouth, has a very effective slogan, using the three letters of its name, "Good Every Minute." Majestic, Superior, Neb., "Home of the Big Show for Little Money."

Has Studied Kiddies' Likes and Dislikes

R. R. BOOTH, of the Paramount, Nebraska City, Neb., was in Omaha the other day and says the caloric reception tendered him upon his recent return home with his bride was not the only unusual stunt that has packed his house. Mr. Booth deserves the laurel wreath for being one of the most live wire exhibitors in the grand old state of Nebraska.

Showing "Hilda from Holland," he erected a miniature Dutch windmill in the lobby of his theatre, put in a tank filled with water and put some live ducks—with anchors to their ankles—and some live fish in the tank. It was a realistic scene and it "drew" the crowd.

At 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning, just as sure as Saturday comes, Mr. Booth is standing in the lobby of his theatre welcoming hundreds of children—for he is one of the pioneer children's matinee exhibitors in the state. He declares the children's favorite kinds of pictures are such as Mary Pickford in "The Prince and the Pauper." "The child's mind is more able than people think. They take a delight in serials and have no trouble at all to follow them from week to week," he says, arguing for serials in children's matinees.

"I tested them. I got first a pictograph, then a dandy single reel, then a travel and then a feature. The feature took the prize. They like travel, but they soon get tired of it.

"I don't favor these woman's clubs interfering with children's matinees. The parents are welcome to attend with their children at my matinees—any time. To make the invitation emphatic, I offered to let the parents in for nothing. I charge the children five cents. The children's programs are so good I show them Saturday afternoon and night, too. The older people can censor them then. But I take pride in my children's programs, and I certainly won't show anything harmful to my big family of little patrons.

"I got a big crowd once, when I was just starting, by advertising I would let in every child who brought a note from his mother saying he had earned the price of admission by carrying in wood or performing some similar errand. Out of an attendance of 450 I got fifty notes, but I am certain a few of the letters were forgeries.

"The kiddies are great advertisers. I have a 'Family group night' every Friday night—Friday night is best on account of school. I show 'Gloria's Romance,' a Paramount pictograph, a Burton Holmes travel series and a Ham and Bud comedy. The kids come in flocks, and a lot of them come bringing all their relatives. They are sure great advertisers.

"I tried a comedy night for the children at first, showing nothing but comedy. I found the rougher element of young men attended these too much to be best for the children, so I started my 'family group nights.'"

Yes, Mr. Booth will come pretty close to holding the wreath as one of Nebraska's liveliest live wire exhibitors.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

ONE night of lost sleep, several silken strands of hair, a waist and skirt and the acquirement of several blisters was the cost to Alice Brady from the filming of the fire episode which forms the spectacular climax of a motion picture in which she is to appear late in April.

"Maternity," is the title of the subject, and the script called for Miss Brady as heroine to escape with her child from a burning hospital. It was two o'clock in the morning when the torch was put to the building erected by the World Film Corporation for destruction. When Miss Brady and Madge Evans, the child actress, finally escaped through the pulling of a trap-door, an inventory disclosed the stars' personal losses.

LOU-TELLEGEN and Mary Fuller have returned from Saranac Lake where they have been staging snow scenes for the Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Long Trail," under the direction of Howell Hansel. The players waited for three full weeks before the recent snow storm enabled them to stage the scenes which were required for the picture. "The Long Trail" marks the first appearance of Mary Fuller in a Paramount picture.

J. SEARLE DAWLEY is happy again. For the first time since Mr. Dawley joined the directorial staff of the Famous Players Film Co. he was given a vacation during the time that Robert Vignola directed Marguerite Clark in "The Fortunes of Fifi." Immediately upon completion of the cutting and assembling of "Snow White," which was the last production that he directed for Miss Clark, Mr. Dawley found himself with nothing to do. From that moment on his restlessness and unhappiness of mind continued to increase daily, and grave fears were expressed for his well-being at the end of four weeks. However, serious eventualities were avoided by giving Mr. Dawley the script of "The Valentine Girl" and enabling him to begin work on preparations for staging that production.

RICHARD R. NEILL, long associated with Fox, and other companies, has been engaged to play leads in a Florence La Badie Thanhauser production.

Previous to entering screen ranks Mr. Neill had a legitimate stage career of six years under the management of Charles Frohman, and was with E. H. Sothern, Virginia Harned, Mary Mannering and W. H. Thompson. His first appearance with Thauhauser will be in a new play by Lloyd Lonergan.

ALICE JOYCE, one of the brilliant stars in Vitagraph's orbit, has finished her work in three big pictures without a day's rest in between. "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," "Within the Law" and "The Courage of Silence," all have been completed. The last-named already is released, and the other two will be seen in a short time.

So Miss Joyce just packed up bag and baggage and hied herself to where one could go out without several wrappings of fur. For two weeks the little lady will play around on Florida sands and then, with a nice coat of sunburn that she will have to hide under powder and makeup, she will be back at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn.

WORK on the initial George M. Cohan-Artcraft production, "Broadway Jones" had to be suspended due to the fact that practically all the principals in the cast were temporarily blinded from the powerful lights used in the big Knickerbocker Hotel lobby set.

The first to become afflicted was George M. Cohan, who had to be led from the studio and journeyed to Atlantic City to join his wife and children for a short rest. He is rapidly recovering and expects to be back at the studio in a few days. Marguerite Snow, who plays opposite the star, Crawford Kent and Ida Darling were among those compelled to leave the studio, but it is expected that they will be able to resume work shortly.

LOUISE HUFF is still bombarding her friends at the Famous Players studio with letters to the effect that delightful as the Pacific Coast may be and picturesque as the scenery undoubtedly is, there is the unsurmountable obstacle to be considered that it is three thousand long and dusty miles from Broadway. Miss Huff writes that though she is having a perfectly delightful time at the Lasky studio, she is hunting the mail for instruction from the East to report back in New York.

WITH the completion of "Pearl of the Army" this week, Ralph Kellard will finish his contract as a Pathe star. Mr. Kellard's contract with the Pathe Company has covered a period of fifteen months, during which time he has been starred in "The Precious Packet," a Pathe Gold Rooster feature, in five reels, and in the two Pathe serials, "The Shielding Shadow" and "Pearl of the Army." Mr. Kellard will take a well-earned rest before announcing his future plans.

IN one of the scenes in Lionel Barrymore's new five-reel picture now being rehearsed at the Metro-Rolfe studios by Director Harry Davenport, he is required to gaze intently and with horror at the front page of a newspaper that is brought to him. He was raising the paper in front of him and just starting to register horror; the camera man was buisly turning when suddenly Barrymore stopped and began to snicker.

"Say, Harry, it is pretty hard to register horror when you have to intently study the front page of the War Cry. Get me another paper quick."

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

THE first intimation of the intention of increasing the production of the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in California, was given in Los Angeles this week, by Adolph Zukor, upon his arrival Tuesday. Mr. Zukor came to the coast for a stay of several weeks that he may have opportunity to confer with Director-General Cecil B. de Mille and General Business Manager Frank A. Garbutt concerning the future producing activities of the corporation he serves as president.

It is the intention of the executives to maintain a staff of ten producing companies in Los Angeles, and the present number will shortly be increased according to statement by Mr. Zukor. Mr. de Mille is to be in charge of the direction of the Pickford picture which is spoken of as an adaptation of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Olga Grey, former leading woman in Fine Art-Triangle subjects, has been engaged by the Lasky company and will play in support of Vivian Martin and Jack Pickford in the subject now being filmed by Director Marshall Neilan.

OLGA PRINTZLAU, who recently became a member of the Lasky scenario staff, has completed the preparation of her third original story which will serve as a vehicle starring Sessue Hayakawa, and she has been placed under contract for a year to write exclusively for the Lasky organization.

The second Morosco-Pallas subject, featuring George Behan, will introduce the actor in a characterization different from the roles played heretofore, he appearing in this as an aged French piano teacher. The title decided upon is "The Bond Between," and the principal characters supporting are Colin Chase and Vola Vale. The direction was by Donald Crisp.

At the present time the Beban-Crisp Company is working on a dramatic subject entitled, "The Marcellini Millions," in which an Italian truck farmer is the sole heir to a mammoth estate. The effect of wealth upon the man and his family furnish a psychological story which affords an excellent plot. Eugene Palette, Adele Farrington and Helen Eddy are among the players for this picture.

Howard Estabrook is busy with the filming of a semi-western subject which has Kathlyn Williams and House Peters as stars. Willard Mack is the author of this story which has been titled "Lonely Lou." Miss Williams has just returned from the Lasky studio where she was costarred with Theodore Roberts in a picture titled "Ashes of Hatred."

"The Lonesome Chap" which has Louise Huff and House Peters in the featured parts, has just been completed at the Morosco-Pallas plant. This was made under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint, the Lasky director, who worked at this studio while E. Mason Hopper produced a subject at the Lasky plant. "The Lonesome Chap" is a decidedly western subject.

THIS week saw three new productions started at the Ince-Triangle Kay-Bee studio at Culver City. One is a comedy drama written by C. Gardner Sullivan, and entrusted to Reginald Barker to direct the filming. Enid Bennett is the featured player, and the supporting cast will include a number of well-known Ince players, as wel as a new leading man, Roy Fernandez. He came to the coast more than a year ago, after winning the handsomeman contest conducted by the Universal. Jack Gilbert, Gertrude Claire, Agnes Herring and Walt. Whitman, well-known Ince players, together with Andrew Arbuckle and Cora Drew, character players, will appear in the supporting cast.

Lambert Hillyer has adapted the W. Carey Wonderly story, "One Week" for a screen play, and it was put in production this week by Director Walter Edwards. Anna Luther, late of Fox, and Maude George, formerly heavy actress with Lois Weber, directed subjects, appear in support of William Desmond. Marie Mills, a new actress at the Ince studios, is also cast for a part in this subject.

Dorothy Dalton is the featured player, Charles Gunn, leading man, and Robert McKim, cast for the heavy part in a subject Charles Miller will direct. The play is from an original scenario by Lambert Hillyer, and is spoken of as a drama of present-day society life.

William S. Hart has concluded the scenes for the mining story made at Inceville in which he appears in his usual role of a bad-man, with Margie Wilson in the feminine lead, and with a cameraman and assistant has gone to a big cattle ranch where he can secure scenes of more than 5000 head of cattle. These will be used as a few flashes for his next picture.

Director Victor Schertzinger is working at both the Culver City and Inceville studios in the making of the subject which stars Charles Ray. This will serve as the debut vehicle for Sylvia Bremer, who plays opposite Ray. Her most recent engagement was as ingenue with Grace George. Joseph J. Dowling and Jerome Storm take important roles.

PARKER REID, JR., has deserted the office of the Harper Film Company, where he serves as general representative of Thomas H. Ince, exploiting "Civilization," for a conference with Mr. Ince at the Culver City studios. Reid arrived in Los Angeles early this week, and will be here for several days planning presentations of the big film in other territories.

Final title for the next William S. Hart Ince-Triangle Kay-Bee, announced from the studio this week is "The Square Deal Man." Hart, in this subject, takes an entirely new role, that of a gambler of the old West, Daddy Jack, who wins a rancho at the game and abandons the roulette to care for it. A girl, taken by Mary MacIvor, comes into his life, and adds a romantic interest to the narrative. Hart has a forceful characterization in this story, written by J. G. Hawks, and while there is no murderous gun fighting, the six-shooter is brought into play and serves as a solution for several difficulties. This will be Miss MacIvor's introduction as a leading woman, a position she has won for herself from the ranks of extra girl in a period of eighteen months.

HENRIK IBSEN'S famous play, "The Doll House," is to be filmed for the screen, and actual production has been commenced by an exceptionally strong cast of players under the direction of Joseph deGrasse, at Universal City. The principals are Dorothy Phillips, William B. Stowell, Lon Chaney, Helen Wright, Miriam Shelby, Sidney Dean and a number of children. At present it is the intention that this shall be filmed in not to exceed five reels.

A number of new productions were begun by Universal directors. Jack Conway has taken up the filming of "The Little Belgian," adapted for the screen from plot written by H. O. Davis, general manager of U City. Ella Hall has been selected to play the name role.

Director Charles Swickard has the script for a story named "The Great Adventure," and Mignon Anderson will be the featured player, according to arrangements made late this week. The other members of the cast have not been selected.

The subject recently started by Director Fred Kelsey, with Harry Carey as his featured player, is to be made in three reels. It is titled "Their Hold-Up." Kelsey is author as well as producer of this subject. The scenario was prepared by Eugene B. Lewis. The company has just finished filming "Hair Trigger Burke," a decidedly western melodrama.

The other western company which is in charge of Director George E. Marshall is busy with the making of a three-reel subject, "Bill Brenon, Gentleman." Neal Hart and Janet Eastman, the latter a new comer at the Universal studios, take the featured parts in this decidedly western melodrama. They are supported by a big cast of cowboys.

The Henry McRae Company, producing "His Mother's People," an Indian story, in five reels, has spent a greater part of the week in the vicinity of Elizabeth Lake where early day scenes with a semi-winter atmosphere were secured.

GEORGE SARGENT will direct a three-reel subject adapted from one of the well-known Willard Mack stories, titled "Love Is King." The cast for this picture has not been named.

The Nestorites have a real laugh provoker which was filmed this week under the title of "Grabbing a Jit." The comedy situations are created by two young men, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, appropriating an automobile for their personal use following a wine dinner.

The Joker Company, under the direction of W. W. Beaudine, is making a police film known as "The Careless Cop." William Franey takes the featured part.

Irene Hunt has been cast to play the lead in a one-reel comedy, "The Conscience of Mamie Lou," the role being that of a stenographer.

Allen Curtis and his band of funmakers are figuring out the gold-brick mystery that the truth of the matter may be seen on the screen. Eileen Sedgwick, Ralph McComas and Milton Sims are the leads.

Lois Weber has been busy for the past week writing a story and scenario for her next production temporarily titled, "Is a Woman a Person?" Phillips Smalley and Miss Weber will play the leads in this subject, and the principal supporting players are Priscilla Dean and Harry C. deMoore.

"Treachery and Perfumery" is the exceptional title for a five-reel photoplay which Raymond West is to direct. Jack Mulhall will be the star. This is an original scenario written by the editor of the Universal City department, Eugene B. Lewis, and is a comedy drama with a number of exceptional situations.

William V. Mong has completed the filming of the anti-capital punishment story, and now has in the making a three-reel western picture, "Adopting a Father."

Reid Heustis, recently connected with the Fox studios, where he was in charge of publicity, is a new member of the Universal scenario staff.

Joseph Blethen, owner of the Seattle Times, and party of five, spent Saturday at "U" city. Mr. Blethen's paper has carried more motion picture theatre advertising and motion picture news than any newspaper of the country, and he took a keen interest in investigating the making of motion pictures. He is the first and only publisher in the country to realize that to successfully conduct a motion picture department, the editor needs learn all possible about production. That the Seattle Times motion picture editor, George Bellman, could become thoroughly familiar, Mr. Blethen has him spend more than a week each year in Los Angeles.

ELMER CLIFTON, who has been a member of the Griffith, Majestic and Fine Art organization, serving for the past two years first as juvenile and later as leading man, was this week notified by Manager of Production Frank E. Woods that he merited a promotion, and would be placed in charge of directing a company. The featured player of the first picture to be made by Clifton will be Dorothy Gish. Clifton took the role of the mountain boy in "Intolerance," played an important part in "The Birth of a Nation," and has appeared as leading man in a long list of Fine Art subjects. He has long been a student of the Griffith method of production.

Director Lloyd Ingraham, accompanied by five others, Robert Harron, star; Colleen Moore, Alma Rueben, Charles Lee and Bert Hadley, departed for the East to make scenes en route at a number of the principal cities for "A Young Gentleman of the Old School." The picture will be finished in New York.

W. E. Keefe, Fine Art publicity director, and special representative of D. W. Griffith, has been sent to Salt Lake City and other points in Utah to aid exhibitors in preventing the passage of a censorship act introduced before the Utah legislature. Mr. Keefe has had almost two years' experience in fighting censorship legislation in connection with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in more than thirty West Coast cities where rulings against the film being shown were overcome.

THE American studio at Santa Barbara was almost deserted, as two of the companies were working at Los Angeles during the week. Director Rollin S. Sturgeon was in the West Coast film center with his entire company, which includes Gail Kane, Edward Peil, leading man; Harry Von Meter, heavy; Ethel Ullman, Lucille Younge and Frank Rickert, and Cameraman J. F. Seitz, for scenes in "Whose Wife," and the William Russell Company, which includes Edward Sloman as director; Francelia Billington, leading woman, and a number of others, took scenes of sensational run on a bank, for "High Play."

The only organization working at the studio was that under the direction of James Kirkwood. Most of the time of this company was spent on a New England set so accurate in detail, that it looks as though it might have been picked up in a small New Hampshire village and set down in the American studio. This serves as the home town of "Lizz," taken by Mary Miles Minter. The other principal of the romance is a young minister which is taken by George Fisher. Harvey Clark plays the character part of the father.

Julian Lamothe, formerly identified with the American studio where he served as scenario writer, has returned to the American studio and will write exclusively for this producing company.

PRODUCTION of the "Morals of Men" series was resumed this week at the David Horsley studios, upon the return of Crane Wilbur from a vacation spent at Reno, Nevada. Harrish Ingraham has been engaged to assist Wilbur in production of the remaining three of this series, the first of which to be made will be "The Eye of Envy." This series will be released by the Mutual.

As soon as the making of this picture is well on its way Mr. Horsley promises to give his attention to a number of spectacular productions, and has already engaged a number of prominent motion picture players to take part in these.

The Cub comedy release for March 8 is a western, finished this week, and titled "The Flying Target," George Ovey, as Jerry, serving in the title part when he rides a horse abandoned by a bandit. The filming of the comedy required the erection of a big western town set. The company is now at work on an animal comedy, lions and elephants being numbered among the props.

THE Corona Cineman Company's organization filming the eight or ten-reel subject, "The Curse of Eve," has under the direction of Frank Beal, completed the making of the prologue which shows primitive man and woman in their native haunts. The company found precise locations for the Garden of Eden after many days of searching. The scenes were finally taken on one of the uninhabited Catalina Islands. The producing company went to the island in a small launch. While en route they encountered a very severe rain storm, and every member was given the fright of their lives when the boat was swept against the rocky banks of the island. Fishermen came to the rescue, and by means of a rope ladder thrown over the rocks, the photoplayers climbed to safety. The filming of the scenes required five days on the island, and rather than risk the dangers of the trip, the party of fifteen remained during the five days, living most of the time on crabs and fish which they could secure from the fishermen.

Figures compiled by the business department at the Signal studios show that artificial lighting effects for night scenes in the second episode of the "Railroad Raiders" serial cost the company a sum greater than $1,200, or approximately $600 per reel for lighting only. But those who have had the good fortune to see this release agree that every cent of this expenditure shows in the film, for Director J. P. McGowan has secured night scenes of unusual realistic effects.

Work is now being done on the third chapter titled "Inside Treachery." To insure against delay, two separate and distinct scenarios have been prepared, one so that the company can continue work at the studio if weather conditions make it impossible to go to Nevada for filming of scenes. It will be remembered that many of the exterior scenes of "The Girl and the Game" were made at Las Vegas, where the company plan to shoot many of the exteriors of "The Railroad Raiders."

President John Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles during the past week, and has been spending his time with local producing companies making plans for future releases.

THE next release of the Pollard Pictures on the Mutual program will be "The Devil's Assistant." Final cutting for the film was given by Director Harry Pollard at the San Diego studio this week. It is spoken of as an anti-drug play, and like other subjects from this studio, has Margarita Fischer for its star. The supporting cast includes Jack Mower, as juvenile lead, the husband; Kathleen Kirkham, the feminine heavy, and Monroe Salisbury, as the male heavy, who causes the heroine to become a victim of the drug habit.

By the end of this week, all of the scenes for the last few episodes of "Patria" will be completed by Director Jacques Jacard, and the company working at the old Universal ranch. On Sunday, February 11, many of the big battle scenes for the concluding episodes were enacted. Five captive balloons, two dirigibles, and a Curtis aeroplane, together with about fifteen hundred men and several hundred horses were used. The setting erected for the battlefield gives a perspective of more than a mile with buildings extending that distance.

BEGINNING with this week the Kalem Company, which formerly made the "Hazards of Helen," but now filming the series, "The Daughter of Daring," made a wide departure from their previous style of production. "The Taming of Bill Stevens," is the name of the current subject which is a college boy story of the comedy melodrama class. Helen Gibson's heroine act in this calls for her to ride alongside a runaway box car, climb on top of it to set the brakes, and then leap to her horse that she may reach a switch and turn the car in on it. Lloyd Whitlock and George Routh are the principal members of the supporting cast, working under the direction of Scott Sidney. The company will next take up the filming of "The Blazing Gondola," most of the scenes for which will be made at the Lone Point Kalem station.

The Kalem "American Girl" Company is filming the fifth of this series to be known as "The Golden Eagle Trail." Scenario provides that Maris Sais shall cross a canyon on a lariat. The direction is in charge of James Horne.

The "Stingaree" series being made by director Howard Mitchell caused an addition to the Kalem zoo of a lamb, increasing the total of specimens to two, the other being a wildcat. The lamb was needed in a scene in which the Australian highwayman endangers himself to capture by going to aid the crippled animal.

The Ham Comedy Company is still working on the bull-fight story temporarily known as "Ham Throws the Bull." An arena has been built at the Glendale studio, and a large number of Mexicans who know all about bull fighting are serving as atmosphere. Al Santell is directing through a translator and the Kalem lot is a lively place these days.

THE Balboa studio at Long Beach is the scene of much activity due to increasing the number of producing studios from four to eight. In the past two weeks a large exterior stage with scene docks, directors' offices, dressing rooms and complete diffusing system; enlarged carpenter shops, and other buildings have been erected. A mammoth pool is now being built for making submarine scenes for "The Twisted Threads" serial, and the next few days will see ground broken for the erection of a large glass studio 130x300 feet, with twenty-five foot diffusing system.

The cast for the next Pathe-Balboa serial, "The Twisted Threads," was made known this week. Director Frank H. Crane will have Gordon Sackville as leading man, Bruce Smith, heavy; Julian Dillon, juvenile lead, and Corinne Grant as heavy leading woman supporting Kathlyn Clifford.

There are many new faces to be seen at the Balboa plant. This week Monroe Salisbury and Katherine Kirkman, principals of Clune's "Eyes of the World," who have been playing with the Pollard Company at San Diego were engaged. Winnifred Greenwood is also member of Balboa staff, and Julian Dillon, who recently came to the coast from New York colony, will play juvenile leads. Many other players are under consideration by General Manager H. M. Horkheimer and the stock company is shortly to be materially increased in connection with their new plans.

THE five reel picture which is holding the attention of Director William Worthington, promises to be one of unusual merit. The story will make the picture a decided novelty, and the properties and settings will give it distinction. The technical staff has supplied the company with very unusual clocks, and it is from these the picture derives its name, "The Clock." The timepieces are all of the same design, and differ only in size. Mr. Worthington's leads are Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon. Frank Whitson takes the principal heavy lead.

Eileen Sedgwick, Ralph McComas and Milton Sims are leads in the one reel comedy, "The Man from Bombay," being filmed by Allen Curtis.

Molly Malone is to take the name part in the subject "Her Great Desire" to be filmed under the direction of George Cochrane. Lee Hill is to play the male lead.

Hollywood Hookum

March 3, 1917 NEWS MORE NEWS

EDITORIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Hookum has made an investigation of the serial market this week and statistics compiled cause the introduction of a new feature of great interest. It has been found:

Helen Holmes has created a thrill for every box car in use today;

Ruth Roland has perpetrated a quarter million feet of suspense;

Pearl White has escaped from the clutches of a murderous heavy more times than our adding machine will register;

Helen Gibson used up all the hair-breadth escapes invented;

Grace Cunard has dethroned more rulers than the world contains today;

Kathlyn Williams started it all and is still playing big in the South Sea Islands;

Marin Sais, named after a California county, did her derndest to make 'Frisco and the state known the world over.

Added to the above the investigation brought out the fact that there were enough copies of serials out today to show in every theatre in the land at one time. This stopped the argument.

Hookum is to have a serial —"Shredded Woofs"—and the first chapter appears in this issue. Read it! The entertainment will compensate you for the eye strain. Don't miss a single chapter or episode. If you are not a subscriber now, wire your subscription, for valuable prizes are to be given the parties who guess the contents of the concluding chapter. (Announcement later.)

Bright and fair all week.

Ted Sloman was told by an actor that it couldn't be done, and so he put on the war paint, forgot he was director, and did the scene. And now he has to play in a number of others for the American release, "High Play," which caused the other actor to say, "it served him right."

When a Turin, Italy, exhibitor mailed a folder announcing the appearance of "The Girl of the Golden West," to Mabel Van Buren, star of this Lasky production, he used an "O" instead of an "A" in her second handle, and the mail censors made a thorough investigation, and decided it was harmless.

Hal. Lockwood and Lester Cuneo have been fightin' again.

A warm reception was tendered Carl Laemmle at U City. He was shown the hell set.

Ruth Stonehouse and a bevy of U City actresses want to be red-crossers if there's war.

Clyde Cook, cameraman for the Lynn Reynolds Company, claims the championship in checker playing of U City and the world.

Phil Lang is temporarily laid up from an auto smash. No, he wasn't driving, just playing the role of a passenger in a jitney.

Wild tales of Dorothy Dalton doing a Grecian dance in eighteen inches of snow on the top of Mount Baldy have reached the public press.

Hell was froze over this week, and so the old time simile passes out of date. Lois Weber had hell built for "Even As You and I."

Tom Ince when told by an actress that she had two splendid offers to go east, guessed them both right off the bat, and named the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific.

Tod Browning, that Fine Art director, has established what he thinks is a long distance record. He kept the camera and a company busy for twenty-four hours straight.

Hank McRae told a child actress to get enthusiastic about its mother of the play in a greeting scene and bite her ear. The scream is said to have pierced the celluloid.

And now we learn that H. O. Stechban has blossomed out as a conceiver of original plots suitable for that lass of the golden hair—Jackie. He still combs his hair pompadour.

From no less an authority than old man Carbon Copy, HOOKUM learns that Gail Kane is to do gardening and grow peas, beets and sich like. Her woolly dog is to aid in the scratching old Mother Earth.

The trifling matter of the color of one's hair means nothing to Harry Carter. He's had three shades this week. Brown, a rich cerise, and canary yellow. Right away they raised the price of dye stuffs.

Old man Hoodoo, who follows thirteen around, alighted on Charles Ray's shoulder when the scene just before the fourteenth was being made. A spirited horse gave Charley the speediest ride of his fillum career. The horse will never do it again.

Gene Lewis, U City editor, is so accustomed to visualizing, that after he was in an auto smash-up this week, he told the HOOKUM representative he felt his hair turn white, which causes us to believe that one of his senses is a little off color.

The most recent letter from Japan that we have heard of was received at the American Mutual studios at Santa Barbara. These Japanese are great letter writers, but it would be refreshing for some star to hear from a South Sea islander or a Patagonian Fan.

Bill Russell is reported to have fallen asleep at the switch between scenes, and when he awoke found a magazine lying near which contained a photograph of him with carnations lying across his chest. Days later he learned who the culprits were that would put up such a job on him.

Magnates are here — conferences.

Dorothy Gish is home from paying her respects to Broadway.

As Krazy Kat would say, Tom Swemm is technical director at the Balboa.

Blanche Sweet is reported to have signed with Frohman, and will go east about April 1st.

Bessie Love has the Ukulele habit, and all the Fine Art girlies are saving their nickels to buy an Hawaiian harp.

What would a peacock be without its tail, is the explanation Captain Leslie T. gives for the addition of "e" to his surname.

Doug. Fairbanks can now prove his popularity is as great as Mary's or Charley's, for the exhibitors have started Fairbanks reviews.

Franklyn Farnum loves his art, and he demonstrated it this week by taking a mid-winter swim in the ocean. Yes, he had to be coaxed.

Our esteemed contemporary, the L. A. Examiner, brings to our reading table the interesting information that there are 60,000 motion pictures theatres in the U. S.

John P. Stalling is Fred J. Balshofer's assistant, but from the information booth at the Yorke-Metro studio it could not be learned whether it was a real or adopted name.

HOOKUM mail was cluttered up with a gob of poetry this week, some sentimental fan sent May Allison. As the first and last words did not make sense, we spare our readers.

Press-agentry has rose up again to deny the use of doubles in pictures. The heroine of the most recent story being Claire McDowell, who jumped off an embankment and rolled down a sand hill.

Consolidated crepe hair took a sprint for the better when Oscar Apfel required fifty men with clean shaven heads for "The Hidden Children." The barbers were thankful for the fourteen dollars, but don't see the sense of it from the title.

Not being content with building aerial dressing rooms by the aid of his faithful Underwood, the father of Pete Props has now added movable carpenter shops to the Lasky studio equipment. This fellow's wife should give him a ninth commandment motto card for his birthday.

Marshall Neilan's habit of instructing acquaintances to "call me up in the morning" caused him a telegraph bill. Unable to reach Neilan by phone, and learning he had left town, the acquaintances sent telegrams in all directions, and every one went collect.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Loew Circuit Books Max Linder Comedy Sixty Days

Following closely the statement from Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay offices that the Strand theatre, New York City, had contracted to show the Essanay-Linder comedy, "Max Comes Across," during the week beginning February 18, comes the statement that Loew's circuit had booked the Linder comedy for approximately sixty days. This, in addition to the numerous smaller circuits and individual theatres where the Linder comedies will be shown, augurs success for the Essanay-Linder comedies.

Critics everywhere whose opinions are valued speak favorably of "Max Comes Across," and there appears to be little doubt that the twelve pictures which the famous European film comedian is under contract to make for Essanay will achieve a distinct success.

Eight Runs for Each Chaplin Film in Butte House

The Orpheum theatre, Butte, Montana, is holding up well under a unique policy which has included the booking of each Charlie Chaplin subject eight times. The comedian's latest effort is drawing the crowds to the playhouse, which is under the management of J. A. Haas. Considering that there are ten picture theatres in Butte which has a population of 90,000, Manager Haas feels he has done himself proud in exhibiting the foresight to rebook the Chaplin features successfully.

Exhibitor Books Year Ahead

Probably all records for booking a picture in advance have been broken by Burr Swan of Swan's Opera House, Pittsfield, Ill.

Mr. Swan has played Pathe's "Little Mary Sunshine" pictures with such great success that he has booked "Twin Kiddies" for December 25, 1917.

Ascher Bros., Chi., Sign Annual Vita Contract

Seven Large Houses Covered; Blue Ribbon Feature and Comedies Booked; All Eleven Theatres Play "Girl Philippa"

WHAT is said to be one of the biggest annual contracts for program service ever entered into in the city of Chicago has just been signed between Ascher Brothers, owners of the largest chain of motion picture theatres in that city, and Vitagraph V-L-S-E, distributors of Vitagraph productions.

The contract calls for the complete Vitagraph service, including special features, Blue Ribbon program features, comedies, etc.

Seven of Ascher Brothers' theatres will immediately begin to use Vitagraph productions weekly for the next year. These theatres cover every section of Chicago. They are: Cosmopolitan, Oakland Square, Frolic, Milford, Columbus, Lane Court and Calo. All of these theatres have a seating capacity of between 1,000 and 1,400.

Ascher Brothers desired to contract for four more of their theatres for Vitagraph service for a year, in addition to the seven just named. But contracts were already in force between Vitagraph V-L-S-E and houses in immediate opposition to these four Ascher Brothers' theatres.

All eleven Ascher theatres, however, have booked "The Girl Philippa," Vitagraph's presentation of Robert W. Chambers's literary masterpiece, with Anita Stewart in the title role.

The "Captain Jinks" Vitagraph comedy series, starring Frank Daniels, and the "Big V" comedy series, which now are produced at Vitagraph's Los Angeles studios, will also be used in the Ascher theatres in addition to the Blue Ribbon feature releases.

Sydney E. Abel, manager of the Chicago exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, closed the contract with Ascher Brothers.

A widespread advertising campaign in the Chicago newspapers has been arranged by Ascher Brothers.

Honolulu Gets "Sins"—May Show to Leper Colony

The San Francisco office of the McClure Series Department of the Triangle Distributing Corporation has booked "Seven Deadly Sins" with the Consolidated Amusement Company of Hawaii. This company controls Hawaii's best theatres, including the Bijou, one of the finest vaudeville theatres in Honolulu. "Seven Deadly Sins" will be the first motion picture feature ever shown in the Bijou, which is giving up its vaudeville bill for pictures, to show "Seven Deadly Sins."

The Consolidated Amusement Company does a great deal of charity work, and after pictures have been successful in their theatres they often are shown free to the poor. The company has asked special permission from the Government to show "Seven Deadly Sins," after its Honolulu run, to the leper colony on the Island of Moloki.

Michigan Prisoners See "The Crisis"

"The Crisis," written by Winston Churchill, filmed by the Selig Polyscope Company, and exploited in Michigan by John H. Kunsky, was presented to more than a thousand prisoners at the State penitentiary at Jackson, through the courtesy of Mr. Kunsky on Sunday, February 4.

The prisoners were not sparing in their applause at every dramatic point of the story. Big men are reported to have wept and applauded as Abraham Lincoln enacted again America's critical history.

Clean Pathe Plays with Gladys Hulette Bring Praise

FRANK and unsought commendation recently given Gladys Hulette by a number of newspaper critics has given an added volume of interest to her newest Pathe film "Pots and Pans Peggy," a Gold Rooster play.

The Philadelphia North American said of the little star: "Gladys Hulette is getting better and better with each picture. She is one of those rarely gifted persons who have no qualms about disfiguring their personal appearance; as a result she looks winning and attractive in any get up." After viewing "Potts and Pans Peggy" the Pathe film committee echoed the "better and better" view.

The story, written by Agnes Johnston, is said to be charming, clean, full of human interest and pathos, with many humorous and quaint whimsical touches.

"Pots and Pans Peggy" is the story of a little Irish girl who has a lively brood of younger brothers and sisters to look after. To support them she goes out to service and by her big heart, shrewd common sense and native decency brings order into a disordered household, reforms the erring son, aids the daughter to win the man she loves, foils a villain and wins for herself a husband of her own kind.

Pathe is proud of the happy combination of talent, that of Miss Johnson and Miss Hulette, for they say the pair work out pictures that are different—that have a charm all their own.

Exhibitors have not been slow to recognize the drawing value of the features. On presentation of "The Shine Girl," first of the Hulette-Johnson subjects, J. H. Townsend, Plaza theatre, St. Louis; Edward O'Keefe, manager of the City Square and Cort theatres, Atlantic City; H. B. Kester, Cameraphone theatre, Pittsburgh and Fred Wright, Colonial theatre, Hagerstown, Md., sent glowing reports of successful showings—and they were but a few of the commendatory letters that came to the Pathe offices.

Pathe's strongest and proudest boast of Miss Hulette's features is that they are clean, can be shown to any audience any day, and are the best argument against local censorship that any exhibitor can have, and that certainly says much.

Long Run Contract for Vita

The home office of Vitagraph V-L-S-E last Saturday approved contracts for more than seventy-five theatres in Kansas and Nebraska alone on "The Fall of a Nation." In most instances the contracts called for two days' run; fifteen were for three days each. One-day showings were conspicuous by their rareness, just two theatres in the seventy-five having booked "The Fall of a Nation" for less than two days.

Rialto Takes a Third Bluebird

Director S. L. Rothapfel of the New York Rialto, was so well satisfied with the impression "The Mysterious Mrs. M." and "Polly Redhead," made upon his audiences during the past month, that he has decided to book a third Bluebird for his theatre—"Mutiny," a Lynn F. Reynolds story of the sea.

"Mutiny" is set for release on the regular Bluebird program, March 12, and to show it at the Rialto a pre-release will be arranged. Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and George Hernandez will be featured in the production. The title is doubly applicable to the story, for there is a mutiny of love as well as a rebellion among the sailors on the high seas.

Return Bookings Popularity Test of "Skinner's Dress Suit"

Henry Irving Dodge, author, is authority for the statement that the picturization of "Skinner's Dress Suit" by Essanay is better than the original story.

"There are original touches put in that greatly aid the story," said the creator. Above all, for a smooth running, human, absorbing proposition, the picture beats anything I have seen."

The producing company reports that "Skinner's Dress Suit" is having record bookings. Critics have been high in praise of the subject. As a result, K.E.S.E. has been doing a rush business. Capacity business is reported by exhibitors, and return showings are the rule at the larger theatres.

South Running "Great Secret" Big

With Harry Cohen, George Schwartz and Harry E. Reddish on the road for Metro in this vicinity, the Washington exchange is making some very important contracts with exhibitors. Mr. Schwartz reports that the Bushman-Bayne serial of "The Great Secret" was breaking records by its close bookings.

Three houses are making consecutive first runs of it in Washington; seven houses are similarly booking it in Baltimore; five houses likewise in Norfolk and Richmond, while other important cities are making from three to five consecutive runs. The three prints are kept constantly busy. Other managers are clamoring for bookings.

Serial from Flatbush Picture Center Going Big

Marcus Loew is a booster for the Vitagraph Serial, "The Secret Kingdom." Twenty-seven theatres of the theatrical magnate are playing the subject, and in a letter to Vitagraph, Mr. Loew declares the picture is doing even more than expected of it.

He is not alone in his praise of the feature. After viewing fifteen episodes of "The Secret Kingdom," Manager Woda of the Orpheum, Cleveland, booked the serial for a week's showing for every chapter. Another phase of the popularity of the picture is seen in the fact that out of 1,900 new annual contracts signed for Vitagraph feature service since January 1, more than 1,400 have included "The Secret Kingdom" as part of the service contracted for.

Big Trenton House Takes Metros

The New Jersey Metro Film Service, through its president, Herman F. Jans, has just contracted with the State Street theatre, Trenton, for the handling of Metro wonder plays, on a program of three days consecutively each week.

This is one of the largest of New Jersey's playhouses, and is owned by M. Hirschfield, of the Surprise Amusement Company. The State Street theatre has a seating capacity of 1,500.

"Hell Morgan's Girl"

Purchased Outright

NOW A BLUEBIRD

After advertising this big production for weeks as a State Rights proposition, negotiations were withdrawn because BLUEBIRD Exchange Managers who viewed this production in New York City and elsewhere in BLUEBIRD Exchanges throughout the country realized the possibility of the production and offered more money for it than had been put up by State Rights Buyers. All State Rights money has been returned and arrangements now made to release "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" as a BLUEBIRD SPECIAL not on the regular BLUEBIRD program. "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" is a tremendous Box Office Attraction. An inspection of the sample print (if possible) will tell you more and convince you quicker than a dozen pages of advertising. Here's a real production that will win big entirely on its merits alone. Far sighted Exhibitors will go out of their way to secure this production. Take our tip and act immediately. FOLLOWING are extracts from a few of the hundreds of letters we are constantly receiving from enthusiastic Exhibitors who have found in BLUEBIRD Photoplays the perfect entertainment that attracts and pleases their patrons, and proves profitable in every sense of the word. Read them. They are from men who like yourself, are in business to make money:

I have noted with much interest the steady improvement in QUALITY and the ever increasing POPULARITY and PRESTIGE of the BLUEBIRD Program. I have paid more than ordinary attention to the PROGRESS of the BLUEBIRD Program because in the Spring of 1916 I staked my judgment on its WINNING QUALITIES against the advice and opinions of a number of Film Men who were in a good position to be qualified judges of a Program's possibilities, and have seen my judgment verified. The fact that the BLUEBIRD Program has lived up to and exceeded my expectations, explains my unusual interest.—WM. E. POWELL, Columbia, Pa.

We find them uniformly clean, meritorious, well played and all the productions are excellent. This is not my personal opinion but that of our patrons also, as we endeavor to ascertain from them from time to time their likes and dislikes, and cater to their tastes.—JOHN POPULIAS, Steubenville, Ohio.

BLUEBIRD features rank among the very best film productions on the market in every respect. I have run quite a number of BLUEBIRD features in my house, all of which have pleased my patrons immensely. To a number of my patrons all I have to say is "There's a Bluebird Coming," and regardless of the title of the subject they turn out in large numbers, knowing that they will have the pleasure of witnessing a good picture. —C. E. BERNARD, London, Ont.

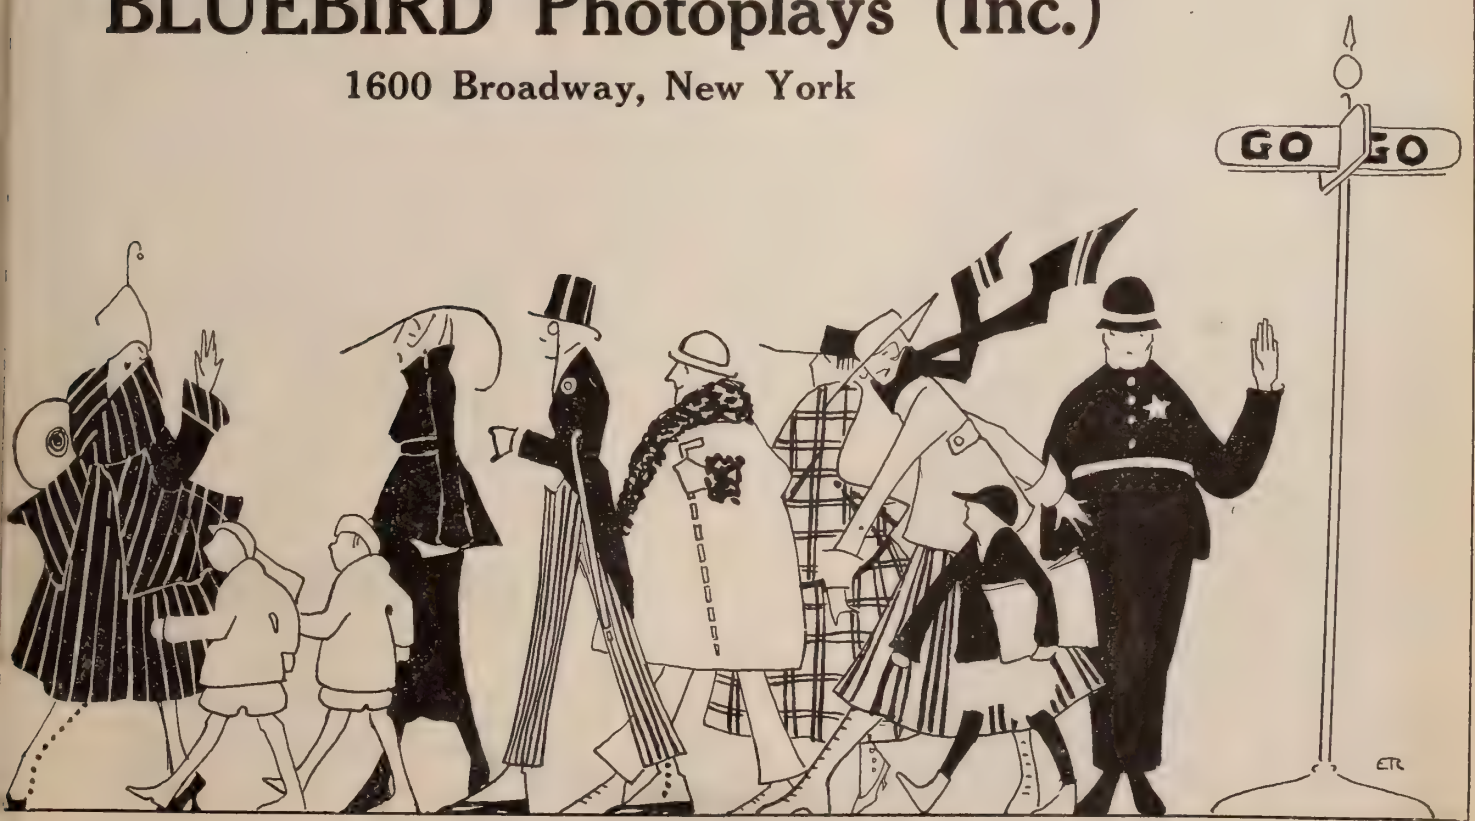
I am proud to give place on the Circle screen to "THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M."—S. BARRET McCORMICK, Indianapolis, Ind.



If there are any houses in this neck of the wood you are unable to put BLUEBIRDS in and I can assist you in any way to accomplish this, I will only be too glad to help as, "I am strong for BLUEBIRDS." (Why?) Because "BLUEBIRDS" are strong for me, having won a home with my patrons.—A. A. ULM, Randolph, Neb.

Must say in all my eleven years' experience of operating and managing houses, "THE THREE GODFATHERS" is the Greatest and Best Picture I have ever had the pleasure to witness.—H. M. MASON, Newman Grove, Neb.

Why gamble with flivver features. BLUEBIRDS are sure winners. The finest feature films on the market today. You can get your share of the wonderful BLUEBIRD popularity by communicating with your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

Gaumont Presents Interesting Week's Program

The Gaumont Company starts the week of March 4 with the release on that day of "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. This issue, No. 44, includes "Strange Industries of the Arabs," "Conc-Artistry," novel jewelry from sea objects; "Making a Rubber Shoe," an exposition of a new serum for the treatment of cancer, and a picture of a baby and a puppy dog, calculated to show parents the danger of infection from such playful little pets when not watched.

The second reel of the week is "Tours Around the World" No. 18, released March 6. It takes the arm-chair traveler to Munich, the third largest city of Germany, to the historic Schonbrunn Castle, Vienna, and to the City of Rustchuk, a place of 40,000 inhabitants on the Danube in Northern Bulgaria.

There are two reels issued March 7. These are the Mutual Weekly and the split-reel, "See America First."

Owing to a change in the release date of "Reel Life," moved from Sunday to Thursday, there will be two issues of "Reel Life" in the week of March 4. The second will be issued March 8. The most interesting picture, perhaps, of this reel is that which depicts the fur industry.

Another Comedy Series Ready

Beginning March 3, a group of one-reel Selig Comedies will be released by General Film Service at weekly intervals. These productions include farces written by William E. Wing, E. Lynn Summers and other well-known writers. The titles are: "No Place Like Home," "Over the Garden Wall," "Everybody was Satisfied" and "Bill and the Bearded Lady."

Variety Program Released by Pathe on March 4

Doris Grey in Gold Rooster; One of Closing "Pearl Chapters"; "Patria" Episode; Comedies, Scenics Presented

A GOLD Rooster Play, two serials, a one-reel comedy, a split-reel fashion and scenic, a split-reel cartoon and scenic and two issues of the Pathe News, make up Pathe's program for the week of March 4, 1917.

"Her Beloved Enemy" is the Gold Rooster play produced by Thanhouser, featuring Doris Grey and Wayne Arey, supported by J. H. Gilmour and Gladys Leslie. "Her Beloved Enemy" is a comedy melodrama written by Philip Lonergan.

The advertising matter available through Pathe Exchange includes one and six sheets and two styles of three sheets, a banner, a window card, photographic lobby display and heralds.

"The Flag Despoiler" is the 14th episode of "Pearl of the Army," produced by Astra, starring Pearl White. This chapter moves at a fast pace as the story reaches its completion. In this episode the identity of the Silent Menace is disclosed and the interest stimulated in the love story of the next episode.

The eighth chapter of "Patria," entitled "Red Night," takes its place in the program. The serial written by Louis Joseph Vance features Mrs. Vernon Castle.

This episode shows a strike at the Channing munition works, with Patria bringing it to an end by acceding to the men's demands on the condition that they undergo military training; an explosion which is a reproduction of the Black Tom disaster in New York harbor, and the blowing up of a ship at sea with Patria and Donald clinging to the mast.

"Deep-Dyed Villainy" is the title of a Mittenthal comedy in one reel.

The twenty-first release of popular Florence Rose Fashions is entitled "Morning Hours." It is on the same reel with Picturesque Catalonia, a scenic showing the town of Ripol in Catalonia, Spain.

"A Hot Time in the Gym," is the title of George MacManus's "Bringing Up Father" cartoon, animated by Edward Grinham. This is on the same reel with "Government Pets of the Yellowstone Park," a very attractive scenic.

Hearst Pathe News, Nos. 20 and 21 round out the program which is one of the classiest yet produced.

Virginia Pearson Seen in Dual Role March 5

"Sister Against Sister," the newest of Virginia Pearson's subjects for William Fox, will be released on March 5. Miss Pearson plays a dual role in this production.

The main story is preceded by a prologue in which Katherine Lee impersonates the two girls whose parts are taken by Miss Pearson a score of years afterward. This is perhaps the first photodrama in which a child of little Katherine Lee's slight age has ever acted for double-exposure work. Katherine's sister, Jane, is also in the cast.

Other members of the company are Maud Hill, Walter Law, Irving Cummings, Calla Torres, William and Archie Battista.

Mary Murillo wrote the script. James Vincent was the director.

Days of '61 Revived in March Paramount Drama

Marie Doro and Vivian Martin on Month's Program—Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman Co-Star for First Time

THE Civil War, an Irish romance, and a prison reform story are subjects of Lasky productions which will be released by Paramount during the month of March.

The first of these, "Those Without Sin," has Blanche Sweet as the star. "Castles for Two," presents Marie Doro in the stellar role, and "The Prison Without Walls" marks the first appearance of Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman as co-stars.

"Those Without Sin" which will be released on March first is the story of Maliane Landry, a belle of Richmond. It opens considerably before 1861, and the action carries the characters through to the close of the war. Malanie is, of course, a loyal daughter of the South, and her personal bravery and daring in the assistance of the boys in gray forms the chief topic of the story. The supporting cast is an exceptional one including Tom Forman, James Neill, Charles Ogle, Guy Oliver, Charles H. Geldert, Mabel Van Buren, Maym Kelso and the ever delightful little Billy Jacobs. Marshall Neilan is the director of the picture.

In "Castles for Two," Elliott Dexter plays opposite Miss Doro. Others of importance in the supporting cast are Maym Kelso, Horace B. Carpenter, Billy Elmer and Jane Wolff. The story opens in America with Patricia as an extremely wealthy girl. The action then shifts to Ireland, where she goes incognito, posing as her own maid. She is in search of romance, being a firm believer of the fairy stories which her old Irish nurse had told her—and, of course, she finds that for which she is seeking. "Castles for Two" was directed by Frank Reicher, and was written by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun.

"The Prison Without Walls" was written by Robert E. MacAlarney, and presents Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman. The production was staged by E. Mason Hopper with James Neill, Billy Elmer, William Conklin and Camille Ainkerwich in the supporting cast. It is a story of prison reform which deals with the adventures of a young theorist who goes to jail as a convict in the hope of unearthing information concerning a mysterious master criminal who seems to have unlimited power in the underworld.

Many crimes have been committed which were obviously instigated by the "man higher up," but this man can never be traced. It is this difficult job which Huntington Babbs undertakes. The trail is a tortuous one, in the pursuit of which Babbs is harassed by many dangers. It leads into a most unexpected quarter—and to a tremendous amount of dramatic action.

Many New Subjects on General Film Schedule

General Film Company with its war series, and the two Kalem series "The American Girl" and "A Daughter of Daring" is in excellent shape at present to serve its exhibitors.

Great popularity has resulted from the showings of "The War" the scenes of which were taken on French battle fronts, and bookings of this subject are reported heavy. The two Kalem series begin in March.

Marin Sais features in "The American Girl" written by Frederick R. Bechdolt. The first episode will be "The Black Rider of Tasajara."

Helen Gibson, whose daring feats are well-known, is called upon for extra hazardous work in "In the Path of Peril," first episode of "A Daughter of Daring," and this serial furnishes ample opportunities for Helen to retain the fans' goodwill.

General's two-part Vitagraph series, featuring Lillian Walker will also be issued in the near future. The first subject is "Dimple's Baby." One other series bids fair to become popular—the film versions of the peer of short story writers, O. Henry. "Past One at Rooney's" taken from "Four Million" will be the first subject.

"Hell Morgan's Girl" Bought by Bluebird

According to the demands of their exchange managers Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has purchased outright from Universal the picture that has for some time been advertised to be distributed on state rights—"Hell Morgan's Girl." The star will be Dorothy Philips, with Lon Chaney and Wm. Stowell heading her supporting company. Joseph De Grasse made the production from Ida May Park's scenario, founded on a story by Harvey Gates.

"Hell Morgan's Girl" is based on incidents immediately preceding the San Francisco earthquake and attendant fire. Considered sensational in the extreme it carries a gripping love story to weld the heart interest with its exciting episodes. The feature will not be issued on the regular Bluebird program, but will be circulated on state right lines.

This is the second feature to meet requirements of a "Bluebird Special." Early in December the industrial preparedness feature, "The Eagle's Wings," was issued on the same lines, distributed by exchange managers independent of the program.

"On Record," Mae Murray Picture

Mae Murray, the Lasky-Paramount star who was last seen in the Paramount Picture, "The Plow Girl," will next appear in "On Record" which was written especially for her by Paul West and John B. Clymer.

Robert Leonard directed the picture in which Tom Forman, Charles Ogle, Louis Morrison, Henry A. Barrows, Bliss Chevalier and Gertrude Maitland appear in support of Miss Murray.

Abandons Stage Tour for Screen

Edna Goodrich, among the latest Mutual's acquisitions under President Freuler's policy of "big stars only," has given up a highly successful vaudeville tour to begin work on her pictures in execution of the Mutual contract, and is now in New York, where her pictures will be made.

"U" to Release Two Dramas as Five-Part Feature

A distinct novelty will be presented by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company early in March, when there will be released on their regular program service a five reel Red Feather production which will be made up of two separate photo-dramas.

This five reel combination will consist of a three act drama, in which Cleo Madison, Molly Malone, Roberta Wilson and Jack Nelson are the principals, and a two act Western comedy drama with Neal Hart, Edward Hearn and Janet Eastman in the leading roles.

This will be known as the Red Feather Double Attraction. The move is inaugurated by the Universal officials to give the public five reel entertainment of two subjects instead of restricting it to one subject padded out with unnecessary details and pretty atmosphere.

Cast Completed, Work Progresses on "The Transgressors"

With the acquisition of Harry Benham, formerly of Thanhouser, and Theodore Friebus, widely known stock actors, Edward Warren has completed his cast of principals for his production now known by the title, "The Transgressors." The cast lines up as follows: Walter Hampden, Charlotte Ives, Marie Shotwell, Sheldon Lewis, Harry Benham and Theodore Friebus. It is one of the most expensive cast of players ever assembled for a single production.

Work has been going forward on Mr. Warren's production rapidly. After studio work will have been completed the company will go south for exterior settings.

Fairbanks Resting Before Work

Prior to starting his initial Artcraft subject, Douglas Fairbanks, latest acquisition of that corporation, has gone to Saranac Lake for a short vacation sojourn.

Before leaving New York Mr. Fairbanks expressed himself as greatly pleased with his new affiliation and stated his first picture would be of a most novel nature.

Mutual Introduces Marjorie Rambeau on Feb. 26

"The Greater Woman" First Screen Subject of Stage Star—Interesting Supporting Program Includes Several Comics

MARJORIE RAMBEAU, will make her first screen appearance in "The Greater Woman" on February 26. This is the first of a series of pictures which will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation starring Miss Rambeau. The feature, produced by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, is a picturization of the play by the same title by Algernon Boyesen, and is the first of Mr. Boyesen's works to reach the screen.

In "The Greater Woman," Miss Rambeau has a most difficult role to handle in the part of a loving wife of unusual character who discovers her weak-willed husband faithless, and also that they are in danger of losing their wealth.

Supporting Miss Rambeau are Aubrey Beattie, Hassan Musselli, Frank Ford, Sara Haidez, Josephine Park, Margaret Grey, H. G. Pattee and Louis Stern.

On February 26, also will be released the seventh of the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" series, "Shorty Hooks a Loan Shark," in which Shorty and his cowboy friends find themselves in the toils of a money lender.

No. 10 of the Mutual-Niagara series "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" is entitled "Taking Chances." Helen Greene plays the lead in this story, the story of which tells of a pretty Southern girl who attempts to run her father's country newspaper after his death. She makes a failure of this venture, but is a success in a position as reporter for a big metropolitan newspaper. In her first assignment she not only captures a whole gang of criminals, but her skilful handling of the big story also wins her a husband.

George Ovey, Arthur Munns, Clair De Witt, Clair Alexander and Helen Gilmore, furnish all the fun in "Jerry's Romance," a one-reel comedy released March 1. George Ovey, as Jerry, has to go through the terrible agony of attending the wedding of the girl who has rejected him. He does everything wrong during the wedding party, and also later when he attempts to help the husband out in some of the difficulties of married life.

The American contributes two short dramas, "Calamity Ann's Protege," released March 2, in which Louise Lester and J. Warren Kerrigan have the leads; and "Cupid and a Brick," ready March 3, with J. Warren Kerrigan and Jack Richardson playiing the principal parts.

In "A Rummy Romance," scheduled for March 4, Paddy McQuire is seen as a country Rube, and Lillian Hamilton plays the role of his sweetheart.

"Tours Around the World," No. 17, released February 27, shows Vienna one of the most picturesque cities of Europe and Toledo, Spain, which is situated on a rugged granite promontory. Other interesting scenes are the former hospital at Santa Cruz, the baths of Caba and St. Martin's bridge.

On February 28 comes No. 77 of "See America First" with scenes from the battlefields of Chickamauga and Chattanooga. On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic "The Elusive Idea," animated for the screen by Harry Palmer. The Mutual Weekly is also released on this date.

Reel Life, No. 44 is scheduled for March 4. This takes up the subjects of "Strange Industries of the Arabs," "Conch Artistry," "Will This Cure Cancer?" "Criminal Cuteness" and "Making Rubber Shoes."

Timely Booking of War Subject

One of the quickest bookings recorded was put over by E. V. Cadugan, the booking manager of the Bon Ton theatre, in Jersey City, when he arranged for first run of "The Fall of a Nation" in his theatre within two hours after the break with Germany had been announced. The Mammoth Film Corporation reports a big booking on this patriotic feature of the U. S. A. the past week.

Thirty-One Reel Program Offered by Universal

Red Feather in Five Reels with Dorothy Davenport Leads; Screen Magazine Becomes a Weekly Instead of Bi-Monthly

FROM one-act comedy and educational to five-reel drama is the gamut of variety run in the thirty-one reel Universal program for the week of February 26. Excellent casts are seen in every type of picture.

The leading feature of the week is the five-act Red Feather drama of love, finance and politics, "The Girl and the Crisis." William V. Mong is the author and producer, and Dorothy Davenport plays the leading role, supported by Charles Perley, William V. Mong, Harry Holden, Alfred Hollingsworth and Forrest Seaberry. This subject will be released Monday, February 26, on which day will appear the Nestor comedy, "A Million in Sight," produced by L. W. Chaudet, with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.

"Mary From America," a three-part comedy drama, released as a Gold Seal, is the feature offering of Tuesday, February 27. The photoplay is from the original story of Elizabeth R. Carpenter, by Maude Grange, and produced by Douglas Gerrard. Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard head the cast, which includes Francis Marion, Margaret Whistler, Harry Crane and Percy Challenger. The other release of this date is the Victor comedy drama, "A Novel Romance," with Flora Parker De Haven and Paul Byron furnishing most of the fun.

"Spike's Bizzy Bike," an L-Ko two-reeler, is the chief release of Wednesday, February 28. This is said to be one of the funniest L-Ko's of the year, with Dan Russell, Marjorie Ray and Vin Moore adding to the gayety. The regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly comes out on Wednesday.

"The Rented Man," a Rex two-act drama, with Claire McDowell, M. K. Wilson and Francis Marion in the leading roles is the chief offering Thursday, March 1. The story by Annie Hamilton Donnell, and was scenarioized and produced under the direction of Ruth Ann Baldwin. The Victor comedy, "They Were Four," with Neal Hart and the Imp drama, "An Hour of Terror," with Matt Moore and Jane Gail are other Thursday offerings.

The Universal Screen Magazine, No. 8, will appear Friday, March 2. Beginning this week the Screen Magazine will be issued weekly instead of twice a month. The Big U two-act war drama, "A Battle of Wits," featuring Harold Lockwood and the Imp drama, "Evil Hands," with Edith Roberts and Edward Hearn in the leading roles, will also be released on Friday.

On Saturday, March 3, the Bison two-act western drama, "The Tornado," with Jack Ford in the lead will appear. The Joker comedy, "Passing the Grip," with William Franey and Gale Henry and the Laemmle drama, "Undoing Evil," featuring King Baggot, are other Saturday releases.

The Imp underworld drama, "Tangled Threads," with Lorimer Johnston, the Big U drama, "Buried Alive," with Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport and the Powers split reel, "Mr. Fuller Pep; An Old Bird Pays Him a Visit," a comedy cartoon, and the Dorsey educational, "The Land of Buddha," are the Sunday releases.

The tenth episode of the Universal super serial, "The Purple Mask," entitled "The House of Mystery," carries Grace Cunard and Francis Ford through more harrowing adventures.

Entertaining Issue of Universal Screen Magazine

The newest Universal Screen Magazine embodies a series of subjects designed to interest and instruct.

The activities of the official government weather bureau and the methods used in their forecasting is shown. The testing of the deadly torpedo carries the spectator to the United States Government proving grounds at Sag Harbor, L. I. A close view of the mechanism of the torpedo gives a glimpse of its workings.

The capers of the Armadillo, the tiny denizen of the Southwestern desert country, and the plastic molding of clay by Willie Hopkins, the sculptor are other subjects on the reel, and there are others of paramount importance, both from instructive and entertaining points of view.

First Linder Comedy Feb. 26; Next Under Way

Following the preliminary campaign of advertising, which is to be kept up during the run of the Linder-Essanay series, the comedian's first picture, "Max Comes Across," will have its general release February 26.

Trade showings of the subject were held at the New York Theatre Roof, and in branch offices of the K-E-S-E service throughout the country. That organization is to handle all the Linder comedies.

Meanwhile Max is well along with his second production, "Max Wants a Divorce." The story has to do with Max's flirtatious disposition. He has hardly left the altar rail before his eye rests upon a chic young lady sitting in the front pew at the wedding. Arriving at their honeymoon apartment, Max and his bride, both still in their wedding clothes, began their "life's battle." Having thoroughly wrecked the apartment, baby grand piano, etc., the two enter peace negotiations, and it is agreed that Max shall get a divorce at once. The plan is that Max shall compromise himself and his wife shall rush in with detectives and thus get the evidence. The chic young person of the church pew is decided upon as the "other woman." Max engages an apartment for the purpose of the plot, and then invites the c. y. p. to meet him there. Unfortunately both Max and the "other woman" in going to the apartment get mixed, and enter the private sanitarium of Dr. Squirrel, specialist in "nuts," across the hallway, where they are put in padded cells.

Many laughable complications ensue, and Max finally promises wifie "never again."

Starring Role for Peggy Hyland

Peggy Hyland, the charming little Vitagraph star, will soon be seen in a production entitled "The Sixteenth Wife," from the story by Molly Elliot Sewall.

Marc MacDermott will be seen opposite Miss Hyland. Following the release of "Intrigue," in which Miss Hyland is seen with Bobby Connolly and Marc MacDermott, Vitagraph will issue "Babette," a five-reel production, with the same stellar cast. It is following the release of "Babette" that "The Sixteenth Wife" will be seen.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Bushman-Bayne Team in Series of Five-Reelers Next

Metro's star team, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are to start work on a series of five-reel features immediately on conclusion of the filming of the last scenes of "The Great Secret" within the next ten days.

Five plays, all said to be of a type especially suited to the talents of the two players, have already been chosen, though only after many conferences between President Rowland of Metro, Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne. Mr. Cabanne, who has directed the episodes of "The Great Secret," will also direct the new series.

"The Eternal Sin" Completed After Delays

The numerous vicissitudes which have beset Herbert Brenon's production of "The Eternal Sin" for Selznick Pictures have ended. The last scene in this photodrama was taken at the Brenon studio last week, and within twenty-four hours Mr. Brenon had packed up the entire negative and taken it to Atlantic City. A moving picture theatre has been engaged in that city, and will be used by Mr. Brenon every morning for the next few weeks in cutting, assembling and titling his picture.

Mr. Brenon's illness and the fact that Florence Reed, the star, was playing in a stage piece were but two of the difficulties attendant on the production.

"The Eternal Sin" will be ready for release within the next few weeks.

Christie Comedies Lent to Sing Sing's Welfare Body

Three Christie comedies, "His Wedding Night," "His Baby," and "By the Sad Sea Waves" have been forwarded to the Mutual Welfare League at Sing Sing for exhibition before the prison inmates, through the kindness of Director Christie. The convicts will enjoy at least an hour of laughter, it is hoped, in viewing these pictures, the best of the Christie productions.

Foreign Artist with Unique

Hamid Shariff, noted European pantomimist. has contracted to appear in one of the super-productions of the Unique Film Corporation. Shariff came to America to play the Hunchback with Gertrude Hoffman's "Sumurun" company, and since then has received a number of offers to appear on the screen.

Another Cub Comedy Ready

"The Flying Target" is the next Cub Comedy which will be released through Mutual. March 8 is scheduled as the date, and the producers claim expenditure on a large scale has made the subject one of the best of the series so far put out.

New Essanay Series, "Do Children Count?"

Will Follow Matrimonial Cycle "Is Marriage Sacred?"—Child Actress to Star—C. M. Peck Author—Other Productions

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces the forthcoming inauguration of a new series of short dramatic productions, the general title of which will be "Do Children Count?"

Essanay's cycle of matrimonial complications, "Is Marriage Sacred?" has met with great popularity among exhibitors and photoplay patrons alike. This cycle, however, will be concluded early in April. It is to provide a suitable substitute that "Do Children Count?" will be offered.

The two series will have no connection, other than that the latter will simply develop further the problems of the home. While "Is Marriage Sacred?" pertained solely to problems of matrimony, "Do Children Count?" will take up the problems arising from the advent of children in the home.

Charles Mortimer Peck, author of the Marriage photoplays, has been secured to write the forthcoming series. There will be twelve in all, each one to have a screen time of approximately thirty minutes. Each will be a separate, distinct photodrama in itself, and if the exhibitor desires, can be booked and run apart from the others, or each as an individual showing.

Little Mary V. McAllister, Essanay's child star, will be featured in each production. This little girl, though only six years old, is well known, through her work, to photoplay patrons.

Among the recent feature productions in which she has appeared were Henry B. Walthall's current drama, "Little Shoes," "The Little Missionary," and many others. A capable stock company has been formed to support the diminutive star. The General Film Service will handle the releases.

Several strong dramatic offerings are ready for release under the "Is Marriage Sacred?" title. "The Extravagant Bride," shown February 24, presents most amply the problem growing out of the marriage of a rich girl, used to every luxury, to a youth of moderate means. "The Vanishing Woman," for release March 3, draws a contrast between the old-fashioned woman and the college girl of today, whose modern ideas get her into trouble. "The Pulse of Madness," to be offered March 10, reveals a young woman who stops at nothing to win the man she loves.

One of the most novel ideas put into a short production is offered in "The Five Dollar Bill," a Black Cat feature to be presented March 6. It demonstrates how that much money can bring happiness, despite the high cost of living and loving. "Aladdin Up-to-Date," to be released March 13, is another interesting photodrama of this series.

Chaplin's Next—"Health Resort"

Charles Spencer Chaplin, having entirely recovered from the inury received from a falling lamp post during the filming of his last comedy, "Easy Street," has started work on the tenth of his funny pictures for Mutual.

This latest child of the Chaplin brain is entitled "Health Resort" and gives Mr. Chaplin an entirely new angle on which to hang his funny business.

In this subect Mr. Chaplin will be supported by his unusual cast, including Edna Purviance and Eric Campbell.

"Health Resort" will be released in March.

Papers Use Novelization of "The Great Secret"

Three hundred and fifty newspapers in thirty-five states are publishing the novelization of Metro's serial, "The Great Secret," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-stars.

The novelization was done by a trained writer, under special suggestions from the Metro Publicity Department that had in mind the requirements of the newspaper "make-up" man as well as the motion picture "fan." Each chapter is confined to two 20-inch columns of matter, including the illustration.

New $100,000 Producing Company in Richmond, Va.

A new motion picture producing company has been incorporated in Richmond, Va., with a capital stock of $100,000, all paid in under the title of Jefferson Motion Pictures, Incorporated. The leading spirit of the new company is E. M. Stearnes, well known throughout the motion picture field. Ground has already been broken for the studio, which is to be complete in every detail, and on grounds covering over one hundred acres of land. The company has already started on its first production and is negotiating with some well-known stars of the profession.

"The Debt" Third of Marjorie Rambeau Pictures

Marjorie Rambeau having finished "Motherhood" has started work at the Frank Powell studios on the third of her series of features for the Mutual Film Corporation. "The Debt," an adaptation of the great European success, is the title of the subject.

Frank Powell is directing the production. The cast includes Robert Elliott, Paul Everton, Anne Sutherland, T. Jerome Lawlor, Agnes Eyre and Nadia Gary, a child actress.

Illustrating "The Cloud Puncher," a Fox Film Comedy Starring Hank Mann

Many New Players Seen in Productions This Week—Irving Cummings Makes Debut as Fox Player—Big Western Plans

ONE of the heroes of the baseball field, Larry McLean, now with the Cincinnati Reds, is among the new players acquired by Fox last week. McLean will have a small part in William Nigh's initial production. Walter Bennett, once of the Pittsburgh nine, will also be in the picture.

Ben L. Taggart, with many Selig pictures and former "opposite" for Irene Fenwick, with Kleine, has been engaged to play as chief in support of Valeska Suratt.

The complete cast has now been picked for the Virginia Pearson subject. It includes besides the star, Irving Cummings, Nora Cecil, Grace Henderson, Nellie Slattery, Alex K. Shannon, G. De Varney, Charles Craig, Lillian De Vere and Ted Griffin. Miss Cecil, Miss Henderson, Miss Slattery, Miss De Vere and Mr. Griffin are all new to Fox Films.

Mr. Craig was in "The Serpent," "Where Love Leads," and "Under Two Flags." Mr. Shannon appeared in "Daredevil Kate," "Ambition," and "The Battle of Life." Mr. De Varney is in "The Tiger Woman," released on February 19.

Irving Cummings has his debut as a Fox photoplayer in "Sister Against Sister," which is scheduled for March 5. He has the role opposite Virginia Pearson. In the company are Walter Law, Maud Hill, Calla Torres, William and Archie Battista and Jane and Katherine Lee.

William Nigh's aggregation of Fox players will go to Tuxedo, N. Y., early next week to complete the outdoor work on his screen drama. The pictures will be completed within a fortnight.

Out in the Pacific Coast studios some big "sets" have been erected for use in various films under way.

An enormous ballroom setting was built in the Hollywood plant for the final scenes in the George Walsh subject.

On the wind-swept rocks of the San Fernando Valley, near Chatsworth, Cal., a great castle has been raised two hundred feet above the plain. Leading down from it are two arms of stairs, seventy in each arm, which descend in horseshoe shape. Beneath are fifty houses, not two of which are painted in the same colors. The effect from the pinnacle of the hill is that of a gorgeously colorful rainbow.

The whole set represents the skill and genius of George Grenier, Fox technical director in the West Coast studios. Incidentally, it is said to represent an outlay of almost $25,000.

Wilbur Supervises Productions

Crane Wilbur will supervise the production of the three remaining pictures to be made to complete the series of six features in which he is starred and which David Horsley will release through the Mutual Film Corporation. His associate in the making of these subjects is to be Harris Ingraham. This was decided at a conference between Mr. Horsley, Mr. Wilbur and Mr. Ingraham.

The production on which Mr. Wilbur and Mr. Ingraham will first collaborate is "The Eye of Envy." It is to be made from a script furnished by Mr. Wilbur and the filmization of it will begin within the next few days.

"The Moral Code," with Anna Q. Nilsson, Art Drama Release

"THE MORAL CODE," the current Art Dramas release, features Anna Q. Nilsson and Walter Hitchcock in what is said to be an impressive presentment of a vital theme. Florence Hamilton and Richard Bartholmess are in leading supporting parts. Ashley Miller wrote and directed the feature.

The two leading characters in this picture are given particularly dramatic roles. The story tells how Gilbert Girard (Walter Hitchcock), a man of the highest integrity and moral sense, marries a young girl whom his scapegrace brother had ruined, in order that no stigma might be attached to their family name. The woman is of a light, butterfly temperament, utterly incapable of understanding the solemnity of the marriage vow, and the deep obligation it involves on the part of the maker. She continues to lead her former loose existence and pays no heed to her husband's pleas that she protect his honor, and recover her true standard of womanhood.

Another woman comes into his life, his secretary, Jean Hyland, who is all that he had imagined his ideal woman would be. Now, when he has tied himself to an unworthy wife, he realizes that the conventions are inadequate; that they do not cover fully the exigiencies of human life.

Thrills Aplenty in Eighth "Patria" Episode

The eighth episode of "Patria," the Pathe-International serial, with Mrs. Vernon Castle as star, is announced for the week of March 4. "Red Night" is the title. In this chapter Patria settles a strike engineered by Huroki, who later fires Black Tom Island where millions of dollars' worth of arms await shipment to the Allies. These scenes duplicate the terrific explosion which recently occurred in New York harbor. Other thrilling events go to make up a particularly interesting episode.

Hundreds of the smaller houses of the country are giving concrete evidence of their belief in the value of the advertising "Patria" has received from presentation at Keith, Orpheum and Proctor theatres by applying for early bookings. Society showings in the larger cities bring further expressions of praise for the "Serial Supreme."

Work Begun on New Enid Bennett Triangle Picture

Thomas H. Ince's new star from the Antipodes, Enid Bennett will make her third screen appearance on the Triangle program in a story written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Preliminary scenes have already been taken.

In this picture Miss Bennett will take the part of a little daughter of the rich who grows up in an atmosphere of snobbishness. Sent to a fashionable boarding school, she is virtually ostracized in spite of her shy efforts to fraternize with her fellow students.

How she finally overcomes the obstacles that stand in her way of being her own natural, affectionate self, adds unique interest to a story of real charm.

Brady Buys Racial Play; Ethel Clayton Satisfied

William A. Brady, director-general of the World Film Corporation, has secured the motion picture rights of "The Pride of Race," in which Robert Hilliard played the star role on the speaking stage. This part is to be assumed by Carlyle Blackwell in the screen version of the drama. The play, with a very appealing love interest, carries a powerful complication in the unexpected revelation of a racial taint in the supposedly white central character.

Simultaneous with the above announcement came word that recent reports that Ethel Clayton contemplated leaving World-Brady were untrue. Miss Clayton is highly valued by the producing corporation and her contract has still more than a year to run.

Plays Both Lead and Support

To William Desmond has fallen the unique distinction of supporting himself in his latest Triangle-Kay Bee starring vehicle. In his new picture Mr. Desmond will appear as his own double, and trick photography and double exposures are necessary throughout the whole five-reel production.

Pathe's "Mystery of the Double Cross" March 18

New Serial Said to Be Replete with Adventure, Love, and Thrills—Mollie King Stars, William Parke Directs

FOLLOWING the widely discussed reports concerning Pathe's big production "Mystery of the Double Cross," it is now definitely announced that this serial will be released March 18. "Mystery of the Double Cross" is characterized as something entirely new in serials. It is said to have adventure, thrills and an absorbing mystery.

Mollie King is the heroine, and she is supported by a cast of unusual excellence. William Parke is the man under whose direction the serial is produced by the Astra Film Corporation at the Pathe studio in Jersey City. It is a photodramatization by Bertram Millhauser of Gilson Willets' original story. The words "Double Cross" are not used in a slang sense. The sign of one cross super-imposed on another is the well of mystery from which flows a fast moving torrent of action and thrills.

Story, cast, production and direction combine to make "Mystery of the Double Cross" the best mystery-serial ever released according to the Pathe Company which has been so successful with its serials.

Very briefly, the basic idea of "Mystery of the Double Cross" is this: Peter Hale, a wealthy young American, returning to New York on a trans-Atlantic steamer, meets a beautiful young girl whose identity he is unable to ascertain. In a panic aboard the ship, however, her dress is torn at the shoulder and he sees on her arm, the mysterious mark of a double cross.

At the office of his father's attorney, the old gentleman's will is read to him for the first time and he learns that in order to inherit the Hale millions, he must find the "Girl of the Double Cross," and win her as his wife. She is described as perfect in mind and body, trained to be his mate. The will provides that if he fails to do so, the money shall go to the man who does win her love.

As they are talking, the door slowly opens and he catches a glimpse of the girl whom he has seen on the steamer. He pursues her, but she has disappeared and his way is barred by a mysterious masked stranger, who, gun in hand, warns him not to follow.

How Peter then meets Phillipa Brewster who he is sure is the girl he seeks, how she denies this, how he doubts her and seeks to prove that she is the "Girl of the Double Cross," makes a thrilling story.

The mystery is sustained to the last chapter and the masked stranger is one of the best serial characters ever created. William Parke, successful director of numerous features, directs this production.

An extensive advertising campaign is promised in connection with the serial. The list of advertising matter and novelties will be obtainable later.

"Pearl" Serial Nearing End

With submarines and threatened war the chief topic of the day, Pathe's military-mystery serial, "Pearl of the Army," is drawing to a successful and interesting close, among the final scenes being the destruction of a submarine by a United States cutter and the explosion of mines in the Panama Canal.

The fourteenth chapter is released March 4 and the fifteenth March 11. The next week sees the release of the big new "Mystery of the Double Cross" serial, in which there is being displayed such country-wide interest.

"Pearl of the Army" is claimed to be Pearl White's greatest success to date, and the news that she is now at work on a new production of adventure, entitled "New York Nights," will be welcome to exhibitors and public because of the "hit" her current serial is making throughout the country.

Anna Nilsson and Walter Hitchcock Are Starred in "The Moral Code," a Coming Art Drama Release

Maxine Elliott Begins Career as Screen Player

Goldwyn Star to Appear in Emotional Role; Allan Dwan to Direct; Beauty's 31 Gowns "Ex-quess-eet" Says Costumer

WITH Allan Dwan on the firing line, Maxine Elliott made her debut before the motion picture camera on Monday, February 19 at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee. Miss Elliott's is the second Goldwyn company to get under way.

The noted beauty will appear first as an emotional star of the cinema. Newspaper critics are accounted responsible for the initial role to be enacted in films by Miss Elliott, they almost unanimously vetoing a suggestion that she remain a light comedienne in her journey from stage to screen.

So her first work will be in a story from the pen of Roi Cooper Megrue, author of "Under Cover," "It Pays to Advertise," "Under Sentence," and other successful dramatic productions.

On arrival at the Goldwyn studios, Miss Elliott found nearly all the company's executives waiting to welcome her. Flowers in profusion and letters and telegrams from well wishing friends, littered the dressing room. Mae Marsh, the first star to be announced by Goldwyn at its formation in December, was working in a studio on the same floor and at once visited Miss Elliott.

Having successfully conquered costuming difficulties, Miss Elliott looked forward without a qualm to further trials. It is a fact that the star ordered, and supervised cutting and fitting of thirty-one gowns in a period of twenty-seven days—and not one proved a disappointment. As Mme. Georgette Merthier breathlessly exclaimed of each "It is delight—gorgeous—perfection."

Allan Dwan, director of several of the most successful Douglas Fairbanks pictures, brings a skilled technical staff with him for the making of Miss Elliott's picture. Rene Guissart will be cameraman, and Arthur Hopkins may bring his talents to aid Mr. Dwan.

Laughs Galore in "Luke" Two-Reel Comedies Issued Monthly

TWO-REEL "Lonesome Luke" comdies, beginning March 18, is the promise made to the exhibitors of the country in response to requests from them, in the statement that J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has signed a new long-time contract with the Rolin Film Company, by the terms of which the entire output of the West Coast Laugh Factory will be released through the big distributing company.

It is now announced that these new pictures will be released at the rate of one a month. This is to insure time to perfect each one.

Hundreds of exhibitors have written the Pathe Company expressing their satisfaction in that corporation's acquirement of the Luke comedies.

"Lonesome Luke's Lonely Life," the first two-reel comedy, deals with Luke's adventures as coatboy in a White Light cafe. In this picture there is a staircase which affords a deal of amusement, and Luke's exhibition dance, with Beebe Daniels as his partner, while the bouncer-like proprietor is trying to reach him is said to be provocative of much mirth.

"Luke in Tincan Alley," the second release, contains a screaming prize fight, with Luke's money on what looks like a dead white hope. Harold Lloyd, Beebe Daniels, Harry Pollard and Margaret Joslin are in the company.

Dazey's Work Bought by Astra

The Astra-Pathe Company has purchased the screen rights of Charles T. Dazey's play "Three Tests," and the work of filming the production will begin shortly. Arrangements for the sale of the play were made through Charles Emerson Cook and J. Allen Boone. Dazey, it will be recalled, recently signed a contract with the Lasky Company, and is now at their studio in Hollywood, California.

Kalem's "Keep Faith" Policy; New "Stingaree" Soon

The Kalem Company has received numerous requests to set a date for the release of the further adventures of "Stingaree," written by E. W. Hornung and featuring True Boardman, but has determined to make no announcement until the entire series is practically finished.

Five two-part episodes have been taken and are now undergoing a process of trimming and titling and the company is working on the sixth "Stingaree" adventure.

With regard to "The American Girl" and "A Daughter of Daring," the new series productions to be released the first of March, the same policy is in effect. There are never less than three episodes of each on hand in the New York offices and these are edited well in advance of their delivery dates.

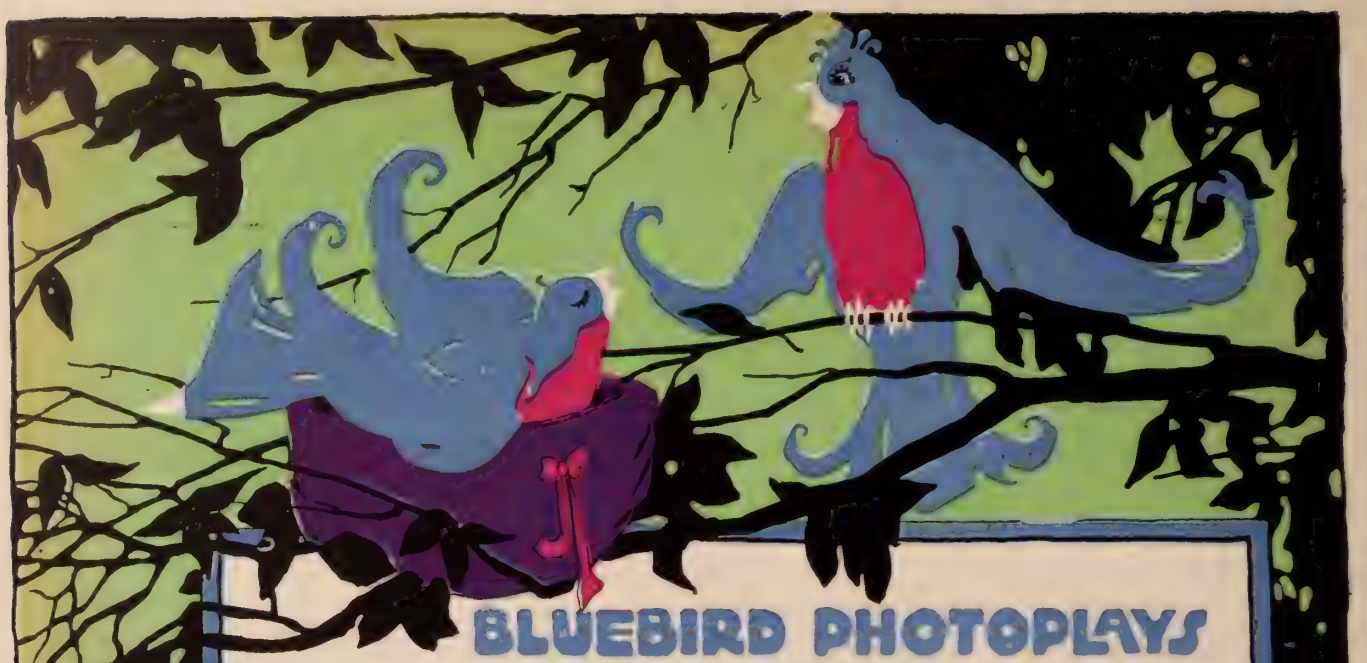
This policy of the Kalem Company is outlined by a high official of the Kalem Company who recently stated:

"We regard any failure of ours to deliver prints of Kalem subjects to all of the General Film exchanges in time to fill first run dates as a breach of good faith.

"Unavoidable delays will occur; bad weather can disrupt the best laid plans, likewise negatives can be delayed in transit, but most of the delays to which exhibitors are subjected are chargeable to a lack of co-operation between studio and factory."

Ministers Approve Thanhauser Film

A number of New York clergymen, representing several denominations, visited the Thanhauser studio a short time ago upon invitation of Edwin Thanhauser, to view the recently completed picture, "The Vicar of Wakefield."



At the conclusion of the exhibition the representatives of the clergy expressed themselves as greatly pleased with the film, and the accurate way in which Goldsmith's story had been visualized.

Special incidental music is planned as a special feature of this production, and S. L. Rothapfel, director of the Rialto, is giving the score his personal attention.

A Little Philosophy on Bluebird Photoplays

What is the object of moving pictures?—Entertainment.
For whom is this entertainment created?—The Public.
Who pays for all this entertainment?—The Public.
Who knows best what character of entertainment is desired?—The Public.
Who then is the first and last judge of what it wants to see?—The Public.

Is it reasonable then to suppose (guided by the foregoing facts) that people who pay good money to be entertained are best versed in judging what they spend their money to see? Yes.

Then, read what Mr. A. E. Sewell, of Minneapolis, Minn., says about BLUEBIRD Photoplays and bear in mind that Mr. Sewell is one of thousands who have written to BLUEBIRD Photoplays expressing appreciation of BLUEBIRD productions.

"The writer is one of those people who prefers to shop in one particular store, eat in a particular restaurant, and patronize a particular barbershop. Therefore, I would prefer to have at least a favorite theatre—a theatrical home as it were. I have never been able to decide on the latter because I have never been able to find one that satisfied me. But last Saturday night I think I found it. I am convinced that it will be that theatre that shows BLUEBIRDS regularly." (Signed) A. E. SEWELL, Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. Sewell reflects the judgment of millions of people throughout this and other countries, who know what they want, and who gladly pay for the kind of entertainment that really entertains.

BLUEBIRDS HAVE ARRIVED in every section of this country. BLUEBIRDS HAVE ARRIVED TO STAY. . . BLUEBIRD Photoplays are the answer to the great National demand for better pictures—for entertainment that really entertains.

Some exhibitors are jealous of the success of their competitors. Other Exhibitors haven't time to be jealous or to wonder how the "Other fellow" gets the money—the profits and the prestige. The wise Exhibitor learns what is winning Nationally and nails the "Winner" for his House. That's why hundreds and hundreds of shrewd Exhibitors have thrown out the thread-bare mediocre of "features" and are holding fast and boosting hard for BLUEBIRDS.

How about you?

Attractive Rambeau Poster Put Out by Mutual

An unusual line of paper has been prepared for "The Greater Woman," presenting Marjorie Rambeau.

A star three-sheet done in eight colors has been made available to exhibitors booking the Rambeau productions. Despite the increased expense involved the Mutual accessories department is placing it on the selling schedule at the standard price for Mutual paper.

The other paper on this production includes a one-sheet scene from the production and a six-sheet depicting one of the biggest moments in this Powell-Mutual production.

"The special eight color three sheet," observed H. F. Turrill of the Mutual's poster department, "is so designed that it may be used by the exhibitor in connection with any Rambeau release. It is also of such quality that it may be framed either with or without glass and will present the aspect of an oil painting."

Timely Cuban Views in Mutual Weekly 112

The value of a "hunch" is demonstrated in Mutual Weekly, No. 112, which contains a set of Cuban pictures. These scenes were taken by Pell Mitchell, editor of the weekly, on a recent visit to Cuba, at which time there was no indication of turmoil. Mr. Mitchell, though on a vacation, unearthed enough to convice him that pictures from Havana might be extremely timely, and devoted himself to taking a large footage.

In the current issue of the Mutual Weekly appear pictures of recruits at Morro Castle and Lieutenant Terry, the army officer who was instrumental in uncovering the present plot against the government of the island republic.

New Lillian Walker Comedy Soon

"Dimples' Baby" is to be the first subject of General Film's new Vitagraph tow-reel comedies featuring Lillian Walker. This picture will give Miss Walker exceptional opportunity, showing her a young girl full of maternal instinct, whose adoption of a baby brings happiness to all concerned.

"Black Stork" Leads Eugenic Crusade on Screen

Legislative Halls, Say Physicians, Will Be Temporary Theatres; Law-Makers Asked to View Haiselden Picture

THE screen is to be extensively used in an effort to force the passage of eugenic marriage laws in every state in the Union. After numerous consultations, some of the best known members of the medical profession have decided that the one way to place before the lawmakers of the different states the disastrous effects of mismated marriages is by showing moving pictures of the offspring of these marriages.

It was decided at a meeting of the Medical Society last week that the first onslaught would be made on the members of the legislature of Illinois following the introduction next week of a eugenic marriage law which seeks to prevent marriages until after a medical examination of the parties to the prospective marriage and after blood tests as well.

The legislative halls, according to the plans of the physicians, for the moment will be turned into a motion picture theatre, and the lawmakers will be requested to view the eugenic photoplay, "The Black Stork," through which Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, the eminent Chicago surgeon, attempts to convey the message that all deformed, unhealthy children should be allowed to die at birth.

Members of the medical profession throughout the country are divided as to the advisability of supporting the plan as advocated by Dr. Haiselden, many of them taking the stand that the duty of a physician is to save life under every condition and without taking into consideration whether the saving of the life is advisable.

But the physicians are unanimous in declaring that "The Black Stork" is the best agency obtainable to drive home the point they desire to make with the lawmakers of the various states.

Recently a committee of physicians from the Medical Society called upon Dr. Haiselden to make arrangements for the showing of the picture before state legislatures now in session. Through an agreement with the Sheriott Pictures Corporation, which owns the picture, arrangements were made by which a clause is to be inserted in the contracts with state rights purchasers, in which the medical societies of the various states are given the privilege to show the picture before the state legislatures, provided no admission is to be charged and that the picture will be confined to one showing to the lawmakers.

According to the plan, as outlined, a committee of three physicians will carry the film from state to state, and the state medical societies of each state visited will provide for the showing and the hearing.

Increase Scope of Gaumont's Bulletin

The Gaumont Company has been issuing a bulletin for exhibitors and others interested in single-reel releases. The scope of this has now been increased to give its readers information also about photoplays and photo novels, released by Gaumont through Mutual.

The current number has some interesting information regarding "Fantomas" and "The Vampires," Gaumont photo novels now on the screen. While the Gaumont Bulletin is largely distributed through Mutual branches, any exhibitor can have it sent him direct by mail merely by sending his name to the Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y.

Star Cast in "Spirit of Romance"

Vivian Martin follows up her success in "The Wax Model" in a new Paramount release on March 2, "The Spirit of Romance."

Some elaborate settings and expensive furniture are used in scenes of this subject. A wealthy Los Angeles citizen loaned the producers an elaborately enameled Venetian set valued at twelve thousand dollars for one scene.

In the cast supporting Miss Martin, there are some of the best known names on the screen; among them the popular Colin Chase, Herbert Standing, George Fisher, John Burton and Elinor Hancock. The production was staged under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

Arctic Breezes No Bar to Chi. Premier of "Girl Philippa"

ABNORMAL weather conditions, the mercury hovering fifteen degrees below zero in an icy gale, did not affect the initial Chicago performance of "The Girl Philippa," the Vitagraph performance with Anita Stewart in the title-role. A capacity audience of the city's most representative people in social, artistic and business circles turned out at the premier at the Ziegfeld.

The showing was arranged for by Sydney E. Abel, manager of the Chicago Exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, who previously gave three public presentations of the subject at local rinks. The spectators upon leaving were asked to make their opinions of the picture on slips. The majority wrote "excellent," and a few designated the film "perfect."

Among the first-nighters were: Mayor and Mrs. William Hale Thompson; Thomas D. Knight, president of the South Side Elevated Railroad; Alexander H. Revell, president of the furniture company of that name; Julius Rosenwald, president of Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Mrs. Ernest Hamill, whose husband is president of the Corn Exchange National Bank; Mrs. Maclay Hoyne, whose husband is State's attorney; Howard F. Gillette, president of Merrill, Cox & Co.; Hugh McBirney Johnston and Morris L. Johnston, of the National Lead Co., and many others of equal prominence.

As an evidence of the fact that "The Girl Philippa" is regarded as clean, wholesome entertainment, it may be cited, that the subject has been passed by the Toronto and Montreal Board of Censors without a single cut.

Real "Prep" Atmosphere for Barbour Films

The co-operation of the authorities of several "prep" schools has been secured by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., in order to insure extraordinarily fine productions of a number of Ralph Henry Barbour's stories of school life that will be produced for release under the Conquest Pictures brand. These pictures will be filmed in the actual vicinity of some of the finest preparatory schools in America, thereby making possible the retention of all of the atmosphere of the original stories.

Picture Train in Safety First Canada Campaign

The first moving picture railway car that ever traveled about Canada, will commence a tour of the Government railway system in support of the safety first campaign. Hon. Frank Cochrane has authorized the fitting up of a car for the exhibition of moving pictures dealing with the dangers of taking unnecessary chances in the performance of railway duties, and the film will be shown to the employees over the entire Government System. The car will be in charge of Safety Engineer J. E. Long, and will spend a week at each of the terminals and divisional points.

Public Will Determine Length of Kalem Series

Following close upon the announcement emanating from the Kalem offices that a new two-part series called "The American Girl" and a new single reel series to be known as "A Daughter of Daring" are in the making, comes the news that no limit will be placed upon the number of episodes of either to be produced.

This is in line with Kalem's policy of the past and means that if its new series productions meet with the reception accorded "The Girl from Frisco," "Stingaree" and "The Hazards of Helen" that exhibitors can count upon a continuance of "The American Girl" and "A Daughter of Daring" as long as the public may determine.

Frederick R. Bechdoldt, author of the stories for "The American Girl," calls his initial episode "The Black Rider of Tasajara." It tells a dramatic tale of a respected Westerner who finds himself drawn into the life of a highwayman almost subconsciously. His unmasking by the American girl, Madge King, is claimed to provide an episode of strong dramatic value.

During the week which has elapsed since the first word of the new series productions was given out the various General Film exchanges have received a large number of inquiries for them. Many of these inquiries come from theatre men who have decided to cut down their costly feature bookings and return to a mixed program of short length subjects.

Barnett Opens Detroit Exchange

Detroit is to have another film exchange. It will be established by B. Barnett, who has bought the Michigan rights to "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and "Joan, the Woman" with Geraldine Farrar, for which he is said to have paid $75,000 for Michigan and Ohio.

Zola's "Nantas" to Be Filmed by U. S. Amusement Corp.

Madam Blaché, the producer of those Art Dramas which are released by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, is at work at the present time scenarioizing "Nantas," the novel written by Emile Zola, the eminent French writer. Although the book has been translated into English, as well as into almost every other modern language, Madam Blaché is basing her screen version on the original French version.

A competent cast will be engaged to portray the characters in the story as soon as Madam Blaché finishes her work on the scenario.

Chicago Critics and Public Receive Selig Special Warmly

FROM Chicago comes laudatory reports of the initial showing of "Beware of Strangers" the latest Selig Special, at the La Salle theatre on February 10.

The story was written by Gilson Willets and produced by Colin Campbell. In the cast are Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Jack Richardson, Edward Coxen, Fritzi Brunette, Vivian Rich, Al. W. Filson, Harry Lonsdale and Eugenie Besserer.

Chicago newspapers were unanimous in praise of the picture.

Bob McKnight in the Evening American says in part: "All wool and a yard wide is 'Beware of Strangers.' There has been no cheating in this sensation. The yarn is good. Popular interest attaches to the film."

Oma Moody Lawrence in the Chicago Post, says of "Beware of Strangers." Certainly the new offering at the La Salle holds the interest of the audiences, and is attracting crowds better than any other production. And with much justice for there is not a moment that is not fraught with suspense; besides there is a moral, and the public loves morals. Every player has been well cast and as a consquence the acting stands out notably. Colin Campbell has done some of his best work in production.

Louella O. Parsons in the Herald says in part: "The Selig management is rather proud of the cast in 'Beware of Strangers,' said William N. Selig: 'I call that a well cast production.' I agree with him. First honors go to Fritzi Brunette. She is at her best and establishes a new record for herself."

Mae Tinee in her review in the Tribune, says in part: "The cast is one of shining excellence from which glow noticeably Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette and others. Certainly, the picture holds interest from start to finish."

"The Black Stork" Is Shown to Chicago Press Men

A special showing of "The Black Stork," the five-reel eugenic photoplay handled by the Sheriott Pictures Corporation, was shown to a gathering of Chicago newspaper men on Tuesday, February 13. O. M. Lawrence of the Chicago Post, who said he had expected to see an ordinary feature, declared that he was surprised, not only at the amount of action which the picture contains, but at the ability of Dr. Harry Heiselden, the surgeon who enacts the leading part.

Following the showing, Nat S. Strange, advertising manager of the Sheriott Pictures Corporation, which is selling the picture on the state rights plan, was the host at a luncheon to the newspaper men.

U. S. Military Film Bought

Rogson Film Company, Inc., Louis T. Rogers, president, with offices at 218 West 42d street, New York City, and 15 West Swan street, Buffalo, announces that they have purchased the five-reel military film "Uncle Sam Awake," which has the endorsement of the United States Government through the War Department.

Enid Bennett on "T" Program—Bessie Love in Comedy

BESSIE LOVE and Enid Bennett are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for March 11. Miss Love will appear in a unique Fine Arts comedy entitled "A Daughter of the Poor," written by Anita Loos and directed by Edward Dillon. Enid Bennett will make her second stellar appearance under the auspices of Thomas H. Ince in a Kay Bee production, entitled "The Little Brother," written by Lois Zellner and directed by Charles Miller.

As the heroine of "A Daughter of the Poor," Bessie Love takes the part of a young girl with an inherent hatred for wealth and all that wealth implies, who finally falls in love with the son of a millionaire, mistaking him for a poor chauffeur. Bessie keeps house for her lazy uncle, who would rather smoke his pipe and rail against life than utilize his muscles. Uncle keeps telling her that he would be worth millions if it were not for his heartless employer, who forces him to work as a night watchman at beggarly wages. But Bessie finally gets a line on the real state of affairs when she visits the factory and finds her relative asleep on the job, while the owner of the factory is working overtime. When the girl discovers that her lover is rich instead of being a downtrodden worker, an opportunity is presented for some of the most telling comedy that the little Fine Arts star has yet achieved.

"The Little Brother," Enid Bennett's vehicle, tells the story of Jerry Ross, a bright, lovable daughter of the East Side, who acts as a home-maker for her two brothers, and upon being convinced of the more desirable portion of a man's estate, dons trousers and becomes a "newsie" in order to make both ends meet. She has to fight her way into supremacy with bare knuckles. And this leads to her meeting with Frank Girard, a mineralogist with a hobby for the "big brother" movement. Girard adopts Jerry, thinking she is a boy, and, after putting her in college, departs for Mexico. Jerry's sex is discovered by the college authorities, but Girard is not notified. She specializes in chemistry, and finally graduates with honors. Girard sends money for his "little brother" to join him in Mexico. The meeting between the two naturally leads to many complications that are both unusual and attractive and go to make a film worth while.

Picture Betterment Body Praises "Vicar of Wakefield"

THE Photoplay League, described as "A National Organization for the Encouragement of the Higher Forms of Motion Picture Art," formally endorsed the Thanhouser production "The Vicar of Wakefield" at a meeting held last week in the home of Mrs. Marcus M. Marks, wife of the President of the Borough of Manhattan. The picture which will be released as a special through the Pathe exchanges is a picturization of Oliver Goldsmith's popular work, and stars Frederick Warde.

The meeting of the league was attended by several persons prominent in civic and social circles of New York City, including Frank Lascelles, director of the league and Helen Varick Boswell, general secretary. The picture was projected in the parlor of the house.

Mr. Lascelles in speaking in behalf of the advisory committee outlined the purposes of the league. "It is not a censor board in any respect," he said, "it has been formed to recommend various pictures upon which it passes to the leading communities in every city of the country. The league has made research as to the general character of the motion picture and in future by giving its patronage will attempt to elevate the tone of productions.

"Branches will be established in other large cities to be maintained by way of popular subscription. The league also wishes to make clear that it has absolutely no business interest in any of the producing companies."

Miss Boswell also spoke and concluded by introducing Frederick Warde, who is seen in the title role of the picture.

Vernon Steele (Goldwyn)

Twelve-Part Version of "The Planter" Progressing

After months of careful preparation and the travel of the company half way around the world, the Nevada Motion Picture Corporation is well along in the production of Herman Whitaker's famous novel, "The Planter." The story is to be shown in ten or twelve reels, and Tyrone Power, who has made such a tremendous hit on both the screen and the stage, is being starred. Half a million it is said, will be spent on production.

The company is located at 40 West Mountain street, Pasadena, and three or four tropical film villages have been built in that vicinity for operation of the company immediately upon its return from Guatemala, where it has been several months.

"A Rummy Romance" is Another Vogue-Mutual With Paddy McQuire

Introducing Miss Elsa Lopez, Triangle Research Director

CREATING atmosphere—artistic atmosphere—while tucked away in an undisturbed corner of the big Triangle-Fine Arts studio in Los Angeles, is the important work of a young woman, Miss Elsa Lopez, who though her picture is never in the papers, and her name unknown on the outside, is nevertheless a czar in her own domain, and a court of last resort in matters pertaining to the adaptation of screen subjects to their proper environment.

Miss Lopez holds down a job in which you would expect to find a scholarly old gentleman, who had spent his life delving in the musty recesses of libraries, but she is eminently qualified for her tasks and says she gets as much pleasure out of it as if she were posing before the camera or basking in the spotlight of fame.

Miss Lopez was educated in Europe, and has traveled in many parts of the world. She is an accomplished linguist, speaking Spanish, French, German and English fluently, and has a nodding acquaintance with several other tongues encountered in her travels. She was born in Asuncion, Paraguay, and is the granddaughter of Francisco Solano Lopez, former president of the South American republic.

She digs out historical incidents, customs of the time or any and all embellishments that may serve further to adorn the characters with an air of realism and assembles them in such form that they will be readily available for costumer, carpenter and director.

Miss Lopez's office is full of note books, scrap books, historical volumes and card index files which contain thousands of references and data concerning hundreds of screen productions which she has compiled solely in her search for accuracy. The subjects range in variety from information and detail regarding the habits and ceremonies of occult mystic to the manipulation of the finger bowl in our best circles.

Balboa's "Fortune Photoplays" Are Under Way

Four companies will be kept going continuously at the Balboa studios in Long Beach, California, preparing the "Fortune Photoplays" series for the General Film Company. The casts of the various dramas, which are to be four reels in length, based on stories in the Street & Smith chain of magazines, will comprise some of the leading screen players of the younger generation.

Among these are Winnifred Greenwood, who has been doing leads for American; Margaret Landis, the youthful Southern beauty who made a success from her first appearance at the age of nineteen, Vola Vale, Ethel Ritchie, Gloria Payton, Kathleen Kirkham and Mignon LeBrun. Male leads will be done by Arthur Shirley, Clifford Gray, Melvin Mayo, Cullen Landis, the nineteen-year old brother of Margaret Landis, R. Henry Grey, Lewis King and James Warner.

Bertram Bracken, who has been in the East directing Theda Bara and other stars for the Fox Film Company, will direct one of the companies. Another will be handled by Edgar Jones, formerly of the Metro forces. The other two companies will be under the direction of Harry Harvey and William Bertram. The first "Fortune Photoplay" to be released will be announced soon.

Convincing Run of K-E-S-E Pictures on Broadway

Two of the largest Broadway houses, and many of the popular theatres in the upper sections of that thoroughfare, will show K. E. S. E. subjects this week.

At the Rialto Manager Rothapfel will present Essanay's "Skinner's Dress Suit," featuring Bryant Washburn. The Max Linder comedy, "Max Comes Across," will hold forth on the screen at the Strand theatre.

K. E. S. E. pictures will be shown at many upper Broadway playhouses also, closing Saturday at the Nemo, 110th and Broadway, where Essanay's "Little Shoes," with Henry B. Walthall, will be exhibited.

A further announcement from the producers last week, regarding the picture, "Skinner's Dress Suit," was that the subject has been booked for three days each in nine Proctor theatres in New York and New York State.

Advertising Helps for "Seven Deadly Sins"

In order to help the exhibitor who books "Seven Deadly Sins," the series of seven five-reel features to be released through the Triangle exchanges at weekly intervals, McClure pictures have compiled a comprehensive book that will be given to each exhibitor who shows the group of photoplays.

A four-column page is devoted to each of the seven dramas. Newspaper stories and displays advertisements in abundance are furnished the exhibitor in order to help him connect his theatre with the vast amount of advertising that McClure pictures have been giving to "Seven Deadly Sins."

Twenty-seven different electros have been provided to aid the exhibitor in illustrating his house advertising.

A feature of the book is a department suggesting special stunts and special ways of unusual advertising to help the exhibitor let the public know where "Seven Deadly Sins" may be seen.

McClure pictures will go farther to aid the exhibitor. To each city special publicity will be sent, playing up stories that are of unusual interest to each locality. When one of the actors in "Seven Deadly Sins" is well known in a particular city—whether because he was born there, calls that city his home or has played there in stock—stories of local interest will be furnished to the newspapers of the territory in which the actor's name is an unusually strong drawing card.

For instance, George Le Guere, one of the seven stars, is a New Orleans boy. He also is a graduate of Georgetown University in Washington, D. C. Already the Washington and New Orleans newspapers have started to use articles telling of Mr. Le Guere's work in "Seven Deadly Sins," publicity which will make Mr. Le Guere's appearance in those two cities an especially strong box-office feature.

Popularity Proof of General Series

Twenty-seven Cleveland houses played "Is Marriage Sacred?" the General Film Company serial which is exciting wide interest, last week.

H. B. Warner to Star in Frohman's "God's Man"

Former Leading Man of Stage to Create Character of Arnold L'Hommedieu in Screen Version of G. B. Howard's Story

FOLLOWING close upon the announcemen of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, that it had secured exclusive motion picture rights at record payment to George Bronson Howard's story of New York and its night life, "God's Man," news now comes from President William L. Sherrill that he has contracted for the services of H. B. Warner, theatrical star, and one of the motion picture fans' favorites.

Mr. Warner will create the character of Arnold L'Hommedieu, the lead in "God's Man."

Mr. Warner's qualifications are those which make him particularly well adapted to the rugged characterization which he will portray, that of a young collegian who drifts from the pathways of respectability, down through the mire of New York's elite underworld, into Broadway's blackest pits of degradation and then, with heroic struggle, back to the dawn and the light of righteousness.

Himself an athlete, member of several victorious Thames crews and permanent holder of the Terries Cup, emblematic of the Foils Championship, he is possessed of the physique such as he will find need for in the portrayal of the character of "Arnold L'Hommedieu."

Little more than two years ago, Mr. Warner first heeded the call of motion pictures, since which time he has appeared in an unbroken series of screen successes. Notable among his appearances have been the features "Shell 43"; "The Vagabond Prince"; "The Raiders" for Triangle and the episode of "Wrath" in the McClure "Seven Deadly Sins."

The character of Arnold L'Hommedieu permits of the application of his widest latitude of experience.

French Offer Received by Brady Picture Star

June Elvidge, who has been contributing a number of remarkably vivid "vampire" personations to World-Brady picture plays during the past few months, has received an interesting offer to transfer her field of artistic endeavor to France and the Societe Generale des Cinematographes Eclipse—otherwise the Eclipse Cinematograph Company. The proposition came to Miss Elvidge through M. Louis Mercanton, the principal director for the French corporation, who was in New York recently for a few days in connection with the American rights for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's new photoplay, "Mothers of France."

On seeking William A. Brady, Mr. Mercanton found Miss Elvidge's contract still had several months to run. He then suggested Mr. Brady make a long-time contract with the actress, and let her go to France for a year's training. Mr. Brady is thinking it over. Miss Elvidge, by the way, is entirely willing.

Kalem's Available Independent of General Subjects

All Kalem-made pictures, whether series or comedy, can in future be booked independently of other releases on the General Film program, under an agreement entered into by Kalem and its distributor.

This arrangement say the producers is eminently fair and beneficial to exhibitors who are trying to cater to a local demand for a particular brand, and it will also enable the Kalem Company to materially increase the demand for its productions through its advertising and to receive the entire benefit of such monies spent.

It is anticipated that when this news becomes generally circulated the demand for "The American Girl" and "A Daughter of Daring," Kalem's two new series productions, will be greatly augment. The new policy it is held should also increase the bookings of "Grant, Police Reporter" and the further adventures of "Stingaree" when it is released.

Minus Lifeline "U" Diver Gives Exhibition

For the purpose of proving to the United States government what a simple matter it would be for German divers to blow up every ferryboat and steamboat in New York harbor, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company sent Tom Barry, a diver, to the bottom of the Hudson River at 138th street and Riverside Drive from the dock of the Fulton Motor Boat and Yacht Club, last Tuesday afternoon.

Barry was one of the group of divers who succeeded in raising the submarine F-4, which sank in the harbor of Honolulu two years ago. He wore in his latest descent a self-contained chemical diving suit weighing 172 pounds, and carried no life-line or means of communication with the surface.

Barry took with him a dummy mine and spent considerable time on the floor of the Hudson, and a large group of New York newspaper men and several hundred people who stood overlooking from Riverside Drive witnessed the demonstration.

After his successful demonstration last Tuesday, Barry left for Miami, Florida, where he is to make some more underwater pictures for the Universal. He took with him a company of players, headed by Helen Marten, and will remain there several weeks.

Release "Little Lost Sister" on March 12

"Little Lost Sister" the well-known book and play by Virginia Brooks has been completed by Director Al Green at the Selig studios, Los Angeles, and will be released as a Selig Red Seal play through K-E-S-E service on Monday, March 12.

In the cast are Marion Warner, Eugenie Besserer, George Fawcett, Joseph Singleton, Will Machin and Al. W. Filson.

Beauty Leads in Four March Bluebird Features

Ella Hall, Louise Lovely, Violet Mersereau and Myrtle Gonzalez Divide Stellar Honors in New Releases

THERE will be a procession of beauties in the four releases Bluebird has scheduled for March—Violet Mersereau, Myrtle Gonzalez, Ella Hall and Louise Lovely running in the order given.

Violet Mersereau will lead off with "The Boy Girl," March 5, a play by John C. Brownell that has been produced by Edwin Stevens. Miss Mersereau will next appear on the Bluebird program in "Susan's Gentleman," another play directed by Mr. Stevens from Kate Jordan's story.

Myrtle Gonzalez, with Val Paul and George Hernandez featured, will appear March 12 in "Mutiny," a Lynn F. Reynolds self-written production. This story of the sea is headed for S. L. Rothapfel's Rialto where two other Bluebirds have preceded it. Scheduled for early presentation is "The Code of the Klondyke," another Lynn F. Reynolds production, with the Gonzalez-Paul-Hernandez trio featuring.

Ella Hall, on March 19, will present "Polly Redhead," a play pre-released for the New York Rialto a fortnight ago. Miss Hall plays a dual role in this play, interpreting the "Pollyooly" stories written by Edgar Jepson. Exhibitors are promised an early return of Miss Hall in another Jack Conway presentation—"Pawned," a feature based on a story by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude.

March will end with Louise Lovely and Rupert Julian appearing in "The Gift Girl," a feature drawn from H. R. Durant's play "Marcel's Birthday Present." This attraction marks Miss Lovely's return to Bluebirds after an absence covering more than three months. As she became a public favorite earlier in the series the announcement of her reappearance will be good box-office news to theatre managers. Rupert Julian directed "The Gift Girl" from E. J. Clawson's scenario.

Mabel Taliaferro in March 5 Metro Release

"The Barricade," a story of society and the stock market, with Mabel Taliaferro as the star, is the March 5 release of Metro Pictures Corporation. The subject, in five parts, was directed by Edwin Carewe for Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.

Miss Taliaferro has the part of Hope Merrill, daughter of a stock gambler, who is ruined by his own dishonest operation. Her father, however, blames John Cook, a young westerner, worth millions, and Hope promises her parent shall be revenged. She fascinated Cook, marries him, and then telling him she hates him sets out to ruin him. Her success in "breaking" her husband, later revelations of her father's untruthfulness, and her successful attempt to rebuild her husband's fortunes, and his love for her, make for an engrossing feature.

Clifford Bruce, Frank Currier and Robert Rendel are in the supporting roles.

American Producers Warned by Canada

Unrest characterizes the motion picture situation in Canada, owing to the differing views held by the censors in the various provinces, and to recently issued "Orders-in-Council of the Government at Ottawa under powers conferred by the War Measures Act.

Under the head of objectionable matter it is stated that no film shall be produced or exhibited that might cause disaffection to his Majesty, or that might interfere with the success of England's land or sea forces, or prejudice recruiting, training, etc., of troops.

A $5,000 fine or five years imprisonment or both are penalties imposed for any offence.

Exhibitors are told to warn American producers that much that is now exhibited over the line with impunity is a criminal offence in Canada. Producers will do well to investigate this condition.

War Scare Gives Mutual Series Added Impetus

R. S. Ballantyne, manager of the Des Moines exchange of the Mutual Film Corporation, was quick to appreciate the timely interest and box office possibilities contained in the Mutual one-reel series "Uncle Sam's Defenders" on account of the present agitation of the question of preparedness in America.

As soon as news came of the possibility of America being drawn into the war Mr. Ballantyne sent out to each exhibitor in his territory a card bearing a picture of President Wilson over the caption "The Man of the Hour," and calling their attention to the golden opportunity to cash in on the six reels of timely subjects contained in "Uncle Sam's Defenders."

These one-reel subjects, released one each week, give information as to what our army and navy are doing. The subjects treated are "Our Boys at the Border," "From Civilian to Soldier," "Afloat and Ashore," "A Jack Tar in the Making," "Scouts of the Sea and Sky" and "Bulldogs of the Deep."

Subject of Last McClure "Sin" Picture Is Secret

"The Seventh Sin," last of the Seven Deadly Sins, McClure series, contains a mystery. McClure Pictures has announced no details of this last feature and only admits some of the more important features of this climax to the series of seven five-reel photoplays.

George Le Guere is billed as the star of "The Seventh Sin," but Mr. Le Guere is not the only star therein. Ann Murdock, Holbrook Blinn, Shirley Mason, Nance O'Neil, H. B. Warner and Charlotte Walker complete the stellar cast.

The theme of "The Seventh Sin" is being kept a secret. It is described as being "the biggest sin of all; the sin that incites all other sins."

It is expected that exhibitors will find a strong box office value in the mystery element in the final photoplay, as well as in the all-star cast.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

Ralph O. Proctor, President, Reel Fellows Club and Manager, Chicago Branch of Art Dramas, Inc.

Were You Aware That—

Max Goldstine, manager of the local Artcraft exchange, was host at a luncheon tendered to Mary Pickford in the Grey Room of the Hotel Sherman on Sunday, February 12. A number of newspaper and trade paper representatives were present to meet the star. Also in the party were Miss Pickford's mother, her sister Lottie, and the latter's daughter Mary Pickford Rapp.

Several contingents of children, hearing that "Little Mary" was in town, came to the Sherman to see her and do her honor. When not engaged in greeting these youthful admirers, Miss Pickford talked in characteristic fashion of the U-boat situation, Douglas Fairbanks, and other strenuous subjects.

While traveling toward Los Angeles, Mary Pickford sent this telegram to Mr. Goldstine: "I hope I made as good with Chicago as Chicago made with me."

The Camel Film Company of Chicago has just completed an advertising film for the Standard Oil Company, featuring one of that company's oil-burning cooking ranges. Sunshine films recently completed their latest one-reel comedy, entitled "The Jones' Jonah Day." Both these films were produced in the American Bioscope studios.

B. F. Lewis, general manager of the La Salle Film Company, is making a tour of the Eastern cities in the interests of Lafco Comedies. Mr. Lewis left Chicago Tuesday night, February 13, and will visit Detroit, Buffalo, Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. He will be gone about two weeks, and hopes to meet all the prominent Eastern states right men.

Reel Fellows' Ball, Chicago, Voted Big Success

Essanay Houses Twenty-One Hundred Merrymakers—Prominent Film Men and Picture Stars Present—Beauty on Every Side

THE Reel Fellows' Studio Ball, held at the Essanay studios on Saturday night, February 11, was one of the biggest, smartest, and most successful affairs ever sponsored by the industry. In point of attendance, receipts and enthusiasm, it completely shatters all records of moving picture balls.

From 9 o'clock until well past midnight the huge Essanay plant was jammed to the doors with film people and fans. Twenty-one hundred people were present during the evening. The success of the affair was due to Geo. K. Spoor's generosity in loaning the studios, to the willing co-operation of his employees, to the advance work done by the Reel Fellows, and last, but not least, to the efforts of Ralph Proctor, Jack Haag, and Henry Miller. The latter triumvirate covered themselves with glory by their showmanship in engineering the party from start to finish. The spirit of the Reel Fellows was typified by M. G. Watkins, who temporarily deserted the hospital to be present at the function.

President George K. Spoor of Essanay gave the Reel Fellows carte blanche to use all the facilities of the great Argyle street studios. He turned over to them the use of the scenic department for decorating the plant, and the services of his stars for entertaining the guests.

Studio C, the world's largest artificially lighted studio, was given over to dancing. A fifteen piece orchestra, supplied by Benson, played a succession of dance syncopations. The dance numbers were appropriately named after Essanay successes, for example, one lilting rag was entitled "Is Marriage Sacred Fox Trot?"

In Studio B, Bryant Washburn and his supporting company, directed by Arthur Berthelet, did scenes for a forthcoming feature, watched by batteries of curious fans.

Among the Essanay players who made a speech or otherwise entertained the throngs were Henry B. Walthall, Max Linder (who spoke in French), Richard Travers, Mary Charleson, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold, Ernest Maupain, Harry Dunkinson, Thomas Commerford, Marguerite Clayton, Nell Craig, Lillian Drew, Doris Kenyon and Charlotte Burton.

In addition, a number of vaudeville celebrities contributed specialties, among them Rose and Arthur Boylan in classic dances, Hariss-Kress in roller-skating feats, Mar in vocal and accordian renditions, and baby Hogan, the child dancer. The interest aroused by Max Linder's wooden-legged dog certainly entitles it to mention.

A striking example of newspaper co-operation was presented when the Chicago Evening American issued a four-page extra edition devoted to the ball. These papers were sold to guests by the picturesquely attired program girls of the "Intolerance" production. The receipts from the sale of newspapers will be used for buying furniture for the Reel Fellows club rooms.

Marguerite Clayton mixed gallons and gallons of punch, using her own receipt.

Dorothy Gish and Edna Goodrich paid Chicago brief visits last week. The Windy City was Miss Goodrich's scholastic, if not her native heath, since she was educated in the Lake View High School.

A trade showing of "The Black Stork" was given at the Rothacker studios on Tuesday morning, February 13, at 10 A. M. "The Black Stork" is an eugenic photoplay based on Dr. Haiselden's refusal to operate on a defective baby. The much discussed physician is himself the star of the film.

An item appeared in this department in the February 17 issue, stating that Watterson R. Rothacker's private secretary, Miss M. B. Morrison, had been recently married. It was Miss Morrison's engagement, not her marriage, that should have been announced. The wedding ceremony will not take place until next spring.

Improvements at the studios of the American Bioscope Company, 6242 Broadway, are still being made. The fireproof assembling and printing rooms are being enlarged, departments for cartoons and animated advertising work have been installed, and new lighting and heating systems are being put in. Extensive painting and decorating is also being done.

Ralph Kettering, indefatigable P. A. for Jones, Linick and Schaefer, asks us to think of the good old days when—Hobart Bosworth was a character man in the Chicago Opera House Stock, Bryant Washburn spotted balls in Smith's Billiard Hall, Horlo Smith sold tickets at the Princess, and D. W. Griffith was assistant stage manager of Hunt's Stock Company, Chicago.

Max Linder comedies will receive their first public showing in America at the Rialto and McVicker's, two Jones, Linick and Schaefer houses. These theatres have booked the entire Linder series for first run engagements of a week. "Max Comes Across" will open at these theatres on Monday, February 9.

IN THE STATE RIGHTS FIELD

Mayer and Rosenthal Buy Grossman Program

Well-Known Theatrical Men Organize Exchange in San Francisco—Both Have Erected Many Large Motion Picture Theatres

THE film situation on the Pacific Coast is given a new and interesting twist through the organization of the M. & R. Film Exchange, Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco. The presence in New York this week of Charles Rosenthal, Jr., explains the "R" of the concern, the other letter standing for Emanuel Mayer. For many years both have been associated in the operation of a string of legitimate theatres in Californian cities. The chain includes the famous Alcazar, from the stage of which were seen the first efforts of some of the foremost stars of the legitimate.

Mr. Mayer, who is the nephew of David Belasco, has worked with Mr. Rosenthal in the building of legitimate theatres, and in later years they were among the first to raise fine edifices for motion pictures. Both are native San Franciscans, and have spent practically all of their careers in purveying amusement.

At his hotel in New York Mr. Rosenthal announced that he had secured the territorial rights for the Pacific Coast on the new program of the H. Grossman Distributing Company. This is to embrace a substantial arrangement of varied releases including the Flora Finch Comedies. A feature of the program is to be the monthly issue of one multiple-reel attraction, that will carry with it tremendous weight in the personnel of the producer and stars.

The advent in the field of the M. & R. Exchange means a very important change in the film map of the Pacific Coast. Heretofore Messrs. Mayer and Rosenthal have dealt with film exchanges in supplying their theatres, but Mr. Rosenthal says that they had been contemplating this move for a long time.

"Embarking in the film supply branch is but a natural evolution of our business. With our extensive experience in supplying the people's wants in amusements we have learned what they don't want—and that is a mighty important thing. In contracting for the Grossman output, I feel that we, too, have listed our business under Mr. Grossman's seal of the 'square deal,' and that we have secured a most creditable production for our initial efforts.

"The M. & R. business will be conducted upon the theory that the public is resentful of any effort at unfair exploitation. Ambiguous titles, questionable themes and the film world's bag of tricks will be studiously avoided in the conduct of our business. We are going into it in a big way, and while we admit that we do not know the ramifications of the film industry, we certainly do know the public temperament and its tastes. We will play to this to our best ability and according to our long experience."

Mr. Rosenthal returns to the Coast in a few days to take up actively the management of the film exchange.

Second Arrow Subject on St. Right Basis Soon

Scenario Said to Be from Widely Read Story—Prominent Cast Planned—Dr. Shallenberger on Special Features

DR. W. E. SHALLENBERGER and the Arrow Film Corporation will shortly begin the production of a new feature film to be disposed of on territorial rights lines when completed. The scenario is founded on a popular story widely known, which has proved especially well adapted to translation to the screen. Thomas J. Carrigan, the supervising director of the Arrow Company, has begun negotiations with two prominent players for the leading roles.

Dr. Shallenberger, speaking of his experience in the production of "The Deemster," and its reception on its first presentation at the Strand theatre, February 8, said: "I appreciate all the arguments put forward in favor of the program. The thousands of moving picture theatres throughout the country must have a source of supply which can be depended upon to meet constant needs at a price that will enable the exhibitor to make money.

"The success of the business depends upon exhibitors' success. I believe more attention should be given to the needs, and the success of the exhibitor. The program plan, however, will always leave room for big special features, elaborately produced with casts of great prominence, just as there is always room on a vaudeville bill for big star numbers.

"The essentials of a successful special production are manifestly a powerful story adaptable to the screen, the name of an author sufficiently well-known to be an actual asset and a star. By star I mean a man or woman of reputation who possesses the ability to visualize on the screen the character as conceived by the author—fulfilling the demands of the eye as well as all dramatic requirements.

"The special feature is just as important today in the industry as the program, and will grow in interest and value to the exhibitor to the extent that it is made of importance and of special excellence by the producer.

"The best bet for the state rights man is a big story by a big author translated to the screen in a big production with big artists. The combination will attract really great public attention.

To Market "A Mormon Maid" on State Right Basis

One million post cards, one thousand twenty-four sheet stands, a nation-wide newspaper campaign agitating afresh the unusual character of the production, and several other as direct and pertinent circulation and publicity stimulations are among the ammunition with which Benjamin Friedman of the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., is bombarding the eye and ear of the trade and lay public anent "A Mormon Maid," the new states rights production for which Hiller and Wilk are selling agents.

By the time this comment appears in print Hiller and Wilk expect to shortly close with one of the Broadway theatres now in consideration and have settled down to the active work of marketing.

Exhibitors and Buyers After "The Black Stork"

A rush of big state rights buyers with requests for screenings of "The Black Stork" the eugenic photoplay, has followed first announcements in the trade papers of the release of the subject. Twenty-two big buyers and three hundred and seventy-two theatre owners or managers are reported to have wired or written Sherriott Pictures Corporation asking information, but a few days after the first announcement.

A special line of paper consisting of from one to twenty sheets on each of which appears a statement by Dr. Henry J. Haiselden, star of the picture, and leading exponent of "death to unhealthy babies at birth" is being prepared.

Kalem's South Studio for U. S. Film Corporation?

That the United States Film Corporation, producers of the Black Diamond comedies, which are leased through Paramount, may secure the lease on the Kalem studio in Jacksonville after April 27 is the general impression in film circles, as it is understood that Kalem will not seek a renewal of their lease, but intend concentrating their studios on the west coast.

Under the direction of Bill Louis the Black Diamond company has been turning out one one-reel comedy per week for the past two months, and are working consistently on their production in order to keep ahead of their release.

"Crucifixion" Scene in Next Selig Special

As yet unnamed, the next Selig spectacular special, which contains episodes including a vision of the Crucifixion of Christ, the execution of Mary, Queen of Scots, Marie Antoinette, and scenes of the Spanish Inquisition, is nearing completion under direction of Colin Campbell.

"The Mormon Maid" Is First of a Series for Open Market

Benjamin Friedman, a prominent film man of the Northwest, has recently organized a company to be known as Friedman Enterprises, Inc., which is said to be incorporated for $250,000. The corporation headquarters are at 923 Longacre building, New York City, and Hiller & Wilk, Inc., are the representatives.

The purpose of this concern is to handle large film productions in the open market. The first of these is entitled "A Mormon Maid," and is a photodrama of early Mormon days. The picture is five reels in length and presents Mae Murray and Hobart Bosworth in the leading roles.

State Film Opens in Detroit

A grand opening of the State Film Company, 221 Broadway, Market building, Detroit, was held February 15. Charles Muehlman, for the past nine months in Indiana for Thomas H. Ince, has been appointed manager of the exchange by Col. W. S. Butterfield, president. This exchange has the Michigan rights to "Civilization," "Libertine," "Conquest of Canaan" and "The Mormon Maid." Col. Butterfield is now negotiating for other productions. "Civilization" is scheduled to start a Detroit engagement at the Washington theatre in March.

Greene Buys Moss Picture for New York State

Chas. H. Streimer, manager of Greene's Feature Photoplays, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, which has obtained control of the B. S. Moss Picture Corporation's "The Girl Who Doesn't Know" for the state of New York, has inaugurated a percentage plan booking tour for this feature.

Several companies will be booked throughout the state beginning with Washington's Birthday at the Regent theatre, Syracuse. It is expected that before the 1st of March ten companies will be working throughout New York state.

Story-Telling Educationals Find Good Market

E. W. Hammons, in Interview, Tells of Success That Has Met Effort to Overcome Prejudice Against Type of Film Formerly Disliked

IF there is anything under the sun that the American public dislikes more than being forcibly educated, theatrical managers have overlooked it.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president of the Educational Films Corporation, has succeeded in introducing a type of film to the American public in face of perhaps the lustiest and most unflagging "It Can't Be Done" chorus that has ever hailed a new venture into the picture industry.

Two years ago, Hammons undertook to introduce films, frankly labeled educational, to exhibitors. This came at a time when ingenious manufacturers of various household and factory necessities had been flooding the market with free trips, via celluloid, to their plants. The public had become tired of being "flim-flammed." They didn't want to be educated. They much preferred sitting back in their seats to watch entertainment without mental labor.

Overcoming this old prejudice has been difficult. The first thing Hammons did was to accumulate several reels of a new type of picture, educational in content, but story telling in flavor. Exhibitors looked at them cynically. A few gave them a trial.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has long and strenuously advocated the educational film, if properly made, because we have realized its commercial possibilities. Mr. Hammons, we believe, is taking full advantage of this excellent opportunity.

In an interview for MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Hammons outlined the present status of his concern and its outlook. What he first said was this:

"Mention any large theatre in this country, and I will tell you if they are running our pictures."

We replied: "The Strand and Rialto, New York; the Stanley, Philadelphia, and the Stillman, Cleveland."

"We have all those," said Hammons, "and nearly every other large theatre in the country that you can mention. Altogether, our films are shown in two hundred theatres. If our plans go through, we will have over a thousand on our list before the end of the year."

Asked about his distributing plan, Mr. Hammons said: "Sixteen exchanges handle our films in the United States and Canada. We require a deposit of four cents a foot from these exchanges and twelve cents on the Ditmar subjects. On the gross receipts of the exchange, we receive thirty per cent. and the exchange gets seventy per cent. until their costs are paid. Beyond that, we split fifty-fifty. By means of the thirty-seventy arrangement, the exchange man is encouraged to work at top speed. The results have been excellent."

The complete success of Mr. Hammons' venture seems now to be merely a matter of time. He has succeeded in overcoming the old prejudice, and the fact that the foremost theatres in the country are constant users of his films testifies amply to the hold they already exert on the public.

Masterpiece Buys Rights to Eastern States

The Masterpiece Film Attractions has purchased the rights for eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, southern New Jersey, Maryland and District of Columbia for the Sun Photoplay Company's releases, one featuring James J. Corbett and "A Woman Wills," with Elsie Leclaire.

As soon as larger quarters can be secured Manager Amsterdam will consolidate his two exchanges, Masterpiece and White Film Company.

Four roadmen are now representing Masterpiece. The latest of these, Messrs. Loftus and Schwartz, represent respectively eastern Pennsylvania and Philadelphia.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Phila. Millionaires Show War Film for Charity

Quaker City Exchanges Enjoy Big Business Week—Chaplin and Billy West Comedies Go Great—New Mutual Home Planned

AN audience of twenty men, representing $50,000,000, witnessed a private showing of the official British war pictures at the Philadelphia exchange of General Film recently. The picture was engaged by the millionaires for three performances at the Metropolitan Opera House, February 17. All fourteen reels were shown. Two-dollar prices prevailed. The performance was for the benefit of British Relief Fund and American Field Amublance.

Manager Hebrew of Philadelphia Vitagraph has started an innovation which is proving of mutual benefit to all concerned. Realizing that every employe should know the pictures he is talking about, Mr. Hebrew has set aside one night a week for everybody in the office to come back at seven and see the latest pictures. Attendance is voluntary, but all come. Often the same picture is shown twice, so as to thoroughly impress its points on the minds of those present. The special projection room of the Vitagraph building makes the plan easy.

Increased sales are already shown, even in the few weeks that the plan has been in vogue.

In the booking of Vitagraphs the Sothern pictures continue on the crest of popularity. Since the war talk for America started, "The Battle Cry of Peace" has taken a big spurt and is booking largely with no present indication of a let-up. "The Secret Kingdom" is also going big.

Hunter Bennett, general exchange supervisor of the Mutual, has been paying the Philadelphia office several weeks' visit. Mr. Bennet is now awaiting a special architect from Chicago, who has plans for a new building for the Philadelphia Mutual exchange. Several sites are under consideration. When a decision is made it is purposed to erect the largest and finest exchange in Philadelphia as a home for Mutual.

Unicorn's Billy West comedies are getting exceptional bookings in the territory controlled by the Philadelphia exchange. Theatres that usually run cheaper films are taking these comedies at increased prices. About 275 houses have regular contracts at present to show Billy West each week.

Charlie Chaplin's "Easy Street," his latest Mutual comedy, took Philadelphia by storm. Every Stanley house downtown (and that means every big theatre in the central district), including the Stanley and the Palace, ran the picture a whole week.

Other Mutuals achieving Philadelphia popularity are Charlotte Walker in "Pardners," Ann Murdock in "Where Love Is," and "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

Canadian Exchange Notes

Harry Price, former Famous Players representative, is now in charge of the Monarch Film Co.'s office in Montreal.

James Travis, formerly of Pathe, is to be special representative in Toronto of the Essanay company. It is understood he has already contracted for the Max Linder comedies in Canada. He will work with Mr. Cooper, representing K. E. S. E.

New Vancouver "U" Manager

E. A. Langley, formerly general sales manager of the Pathe Film Company in Canada, and latterly with the Canadian Auto Sales as general organizer, has joined the Universal force to take charge of the Vancouver office in Canada.

Changes in Tri-State Offices

President Art W. Blankmeyer, of the Tri-State Film Company, who control the Art Drama releases in Michigan and Ohio, announces the following changes: W. A. Kent, as manager of the Detroit exchange, to succeed Bert Graham. Howard O. Pierce, formerly with Bluebird, as Michigan representative and director of publicity. J. J. McCurdy, formerly with Bluebird, as special sales representative in Northern Ohio, traveling out of the Cleveland office.

Kalem Indorses Daylight Saving Plan

The "Daylight Saving" idea which is now being argued in the country's press, is nothing new to the Kalem Company.

At Glendale, California, where the Kalem studios are located, it is quite a common sight to see the various producing units setting out at dawn, intent on utilizing every minute of favorable light for their scenes. Marin Sais, star of the new "American Girl" series is the prime mover in all this, and it was her idea in the first place that she and the other members of her company photographed better in the early morning light than under the pitiless glare of a noonday sun.

Actual experiments carried out by Miss Sais' director, James W. Horne, have proved this theory to be correct. The word has been passed to the other directors and now even Ham and Bud are obliged to turn out early for comedy business.

"The Black Rider of Tasajara," initial episode of "The American Girl," was taken almost entirely during the early morning hours.

"V" New Orleans Branch Moves

The New Orleans Exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, under the management of John A. Steinson, has moved from its old home at 342 Baronne street to larger offices, at 347 Carondelet street.

E. G. Longwell, who for some time has been city salesman for Vitagraph V-L-S-E at its New York Exchange, has been promoted to be assistant branch manager to George Balsdon, succeeding George Balsdon, Jr., who recently was made manager of the St. Louis Exchange.

Des Moines Exchanges Now Charge for Posters

Des Moines exchanges have sent out letters to all customers, under date of February 7, charging for all posters, slides, photos and other accessories. It has been the custom in this territory in the past to handle the poster question with a liberality ruinous to exchanges at the present cost of supplies and paper, hence the united stand by the exchanges against any shading of a proper charge to the exhibitor.

Posters in Des Moines will now be both rented and sold.

St. Louis Picture Body Adds New Members

At a meeting o fthe Theatre Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis on February 9, the following new members were accepted:

William G. Dillon, manager, Movie Department, St. Louis Globe; J. A. Pastelnick, manager, Movie Department, St. Louis Post; Sam Werner, United Program Film Company and Thomas McKeen, manager, Artcraft pictures.

Members were informed the Grievance Committee had effected a satisfactory adjustment with the operators' committee in reference to the proposed increase of $5.70 a week on operators' wages.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

Nicholas Power has left New York for Florida, where he will rest for six or eight weeks.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, left New York Monday for an extended trip through the West in connection with the disposition of the states rights on "The Deemster." He will make Battle Creek, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Indianapolis.

M. J. C. Kornblum, advertising manager of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, Pa., was in New York last week.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish were in the city during the week past.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

THERE was an unusual amount of excitement among the reviewers last week when a press agent handed out a synopsis that told a story corresponding in details, names, locale and plot to the story pictured on the screen.

EVEN screen heroes have their weaknesses. William Farnum is a camera fiend and, armed with three of the instruments, he is seen constantly photographing his brother Dustin.

IN "Peace at Any Price," Herbert Rawlinson plays a role containing a line of light comedy which he "has all to his own little self and in which he shows no trace of acting." Also: "The answer is that he enjoys these parts and keeps his company on the smile all the time he is acting." Which may mean something.

THE Fox publicity department, which so often furnishes material for this page, has been inspired by Washington's birthday to tell the truth in all future stories. There are eight four-line verses driving home the significance of this resolution. All this seems well enough, but did anyone ever doubt the veracity of the Fox or any other publicity department in the first place?

WALTER HILL, the well-known secret agent of Bluebird pictures, was pressed to write a serial for this department. The spasm below is the first episode. How many there will be is still a question. Our only stipulation to the author was that the name of Bluebird should not be used all at once, as then it would undeniably be merely a press agent's excuse for crashing into print. Here it is:

DALLYING WITH DRUDGERY

Synopsis of Preceding Episodes

Fifty words don't amount to much when it comes to telling a story.
That's why we condensed this to so few words.
The yarn cannot be told in little reading matter.
Therefore we make no attempt until next week to unravel the plot.
You might get BLUE——

(End of First Episode.)

Kindly notice the marvelous manner in which the author maintains the suspense by stopping in the midst of a highly exciting moment. Such moments as that usually run five reels, but observe the ingenuity of the author by cutting it to half its length. Watch for the second episode, shown here next week, providing it comes through the mails safely.

THE paragraph below was conceived and perpetrated by one George N. Shorey, who, after sitting at an assortment of geography and arithmetic books for at least three hours and twenty-seven minutes, handed it over:

"Paramount has shown one picture to more than the entire population of the city in which it was shown. We know the facts are right, because Paramount says there were 2 x 11 shows playing to 20,000 persons each—total, 440,000. It therefore can't be a 'misprint.' Eleven shows, properly projected, allowing two minutes for the 20,000 persons to give up their places to others, would require 17 hours to project—so this performance, or series of performances, must have run from 7 A.M. till midnight. Kansas City's self-furnished 'statistics' for 1917 give the total population both sides of the river at 400,000. How would you account for the seeming discrepancy? Easy. We refer to the 'Snow White' performances under the auspices of the Kansas City Star. That's it. The Star did it. You know all things are possible with the right star."

CHICAGO, or, to be exact, that part of Chicago interested in things pictorially moving, was startled not so many days ago when R. H. Fulton, vice-president of the E. E. Fulton Company, disappeared for a few days. It almost caved in when he returned with a wife, formerly Miss Undine Farrington of Battle Creek. To coin a phrase, we wish the couple all happiness on the sea of matrimony.

G. T. BINDBEUTEL, until recently in charge of the publicity and advertising departments at Thanhouser, has been engaged by the Wheeler Syndicate to do special writing.

THE sudden cessation in activities last week was due to the fact that Vitagraph discovered an exhibitor in a smaller etown than either of those hamlets brought to light by Paramount, Goldwyn, Pathe and the World Film. Of course he immediately signed for Vitagraph pictures all the year round, and now officials are considering changing the name of the place from Keeler to Vitagraph.

NOW that so many "effects" are employed by orchestras to heighten the realism of the pictures, why not take another step and install automatic sprinkler systems to be turned on when there are rain scenes?

EDITORIAL

Casting about for some praiseworthy feature of the business to discourse upon this week, we come to the performance of Milton Sills which is one of the brightest spots in "The Honor System." Mr. Sills hasn't got long hair, nor does he paint heavily or wear a sport shirt. He is every inch the man and when it comes to acting, we are not much out of the way when we say that his performance is one of the greatest that the screen has ever pictured. Henry Walthal's in "The Birth of a Nation" was another and H. B. Warner's in "Shell 43" was yet another. The role of the convict offers Mr. Sills opportunities galore, hard ones most of them, and he takes them all with such ease and such a lack of useless ranting that the strength of the part is practically doubled, even tripled, by his performance. When an actor cries in a picture the effect is often so ridiculously sentimental that one smiles. Mr. Sills in "The Honor System" breaks down and cries in the governor's arms and you forget that you're in the theatre.

Proposed Penna. Theatre Building Code Strict

Measures Submitted for Future Legislation Embody Extreme Safety and Fireproof Precautions in Movie Houses

COMPREHENSIVE provisions, embodying stringent regulations governing the construction of future theatres, including motion picture houses, are contained in a proposed building code submitted recently by the Building Code Commission of Pennsylvania to Governor Brumbaugh as the basis for future legislative action on the subject. Seventy of the 1523 sections relate to moving picture houses.

In brief the act provides that motion picture theatres hereafter erected shall be so designed that the floors shall safely sustain in addition to the weight of the floor construction, partitions and permanent fixtures a live load of not less than one hundred pounds on each square foot of surface; stairways a live load of not less than one hundred and fifty pounds per square foot, and roofs, forty pounds. All doors shall open outward by hand pressure. Two front doors only which are not used as emergency exits, may be locked except during time building is occupied by the public. Other doors shall be provided with no other lock than a removable bar on which in the middle shall be painted the words "Closed," "Unlawful." The words "Open," "Push" shall be painted on each exit door. No wall projection, radiator, or other projection shall hereafter be allowed in any aisle, corridor, passageway or exit, and none but attendants shall be allowed to stand in these places.

A space back of the last row of seats may be provided holding not more than twenty per cent. of the entire seating capacity of the building. Ventilating provisions require fifteen hundred cubic feet of free air shall be provided each hour in every theatre for each patron designed to be accommodated. This air must be taken direct from outside the building. After each occupation the theatres shall be ventilated, and also continually during occupation.

All buildings erected to house five hundred or more persons shall be fire resistant construction, and must be more than one-story high, and those accommodating five hundred must have an entrance as wide as the widest part of the auditorium.

The unoccupied space of the theatre, exclusive of aisles and space reserved for standing room, shall be sufficient to contain the whole number of persons accommodated in the ratio of one and one-half square feet for each person. A platform instead of a stage, not more than eight feet in depth will be permitted. Movable scenery will not be allowed.

Many other stipulations as to the electrical wiring, projection booths, etc., are made.

Comedian Host to Exhibitors

On the evening of February 28, Buffalo film men will be host to Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, at a banquet at the Hotel Iroquois. Mr. Arbuckle, with his wife, are on their way from the Coast to New York, and will stop off in Buffalo, as the guests of Manager Daniel Savage, of the local Paramount branch. Mr. Savage is busy arranging a program of entertainment for the illustrious couple. The banquet will be attended by theatre managers from all over Western New York. Newspaper men have also been invited.

Australia Exhibitors Hurt by Daylight Saving

Daylight Saving has been put into force in Australia—much to the chagrin and dismay of the Motion Picture Showmen—or in fact the whole of the amusement purveyors. Under the new arrangement the evening sessions at the theatres which formerly commenced at 8 P. M. are now an hour earlier, viz. 7 P. M. As it is daylight, or at least very bright until nearly 9 P. M. under the new schedule it is easily seen that the pleasure resorts prosper while the theatres suffer. The majority of the outdoor theatres, open air, etc., have had to run vaudeville at the beginning of the performance on account of there being too much light to screen the pictures.

Practically every theatre in every town in Australia is suffering from this new measure, and what with the increased rental, length of programs, wages and censorship combined with this new exhibitors' evil—Daylight Saving, the motion picture theatre proprietor is faced with a problem that is hard to solve.

Censor Cudgels Grasped by Film Service of Baltimore

Following protest of M. E. Morgan, Hotel Jefferson, Charleston, W. Va., that neither exhibitors nor exchangemen were aiding him in any manner in his work against the proposed film censorship in his state, the American Standard Film Service, of Baltimore, through Manager Arthur D. Gans, has come forward with an offer of any financial or other assistance needed.

In addition the corporation has written Mr. Morgan proposing that letters be sent to all exchanges and theatres which will be affected by the passage of the West Virginia bill, expenses of such letters to be borne by the film service company.

Brooklyn Carnival Promises to Be a Gala Affair

What promises to be a most successful event is the Movie Carnival and Ball of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island, to be held at Stauch's Palace, Coney Island, on Wednesday, February 21, the evening before Washington's birthday.

Great interest has already been evidenced by the picture fans of Greater New York in the first public appearance of Douglas Fairbanks. With Anita Stewart, Mr. Fairbanks will lead the grand march.

Boxes have already been engaged by the following companies: Paramount program, Artcraft, Vitagraph, Universal, Bluebird, World, Selznick, Pathe, Metro, Art Dramas, K-E-S-E, Triangle, Mutual, General Film, Flora Finch Company, Picture Playhouse Company, Morning Telegraph, Motion Picture News, Exhibitor's Trade Review, Moving Picture World, Screen Club, Manhattan Local Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the Cinema Club of the Bronx, and others.

Trains will leave every few minutes during the evening from Brooklyn Bridge and Municipal building, landing in Coney Island, just one short block from Stauch's. There has also been provided sufficient parking space for 1,500 automobiles.

Censor Hearing at Lansing, Mich. —New Detroit House

A public hearing on the Eaton Moving Picture Censorship Bill was held before the State Affairs Committee at Lansing, Mich., on February 14. Several officials of Michigan women's clubs spoke for the bill. Against it were Arthur Mitchell of New York, representing D. W. Griffith and other producers, and William H. Shiek and F. A. Schneider, president and secretary of the Detroit Exhibitors League.

March 3 will mark the opening of the New Madison Theatre, Detroit, which it is said will be the largest and finest of the John H. Kunsky theatres. "A Poor Little Rich Girl" will be the attraction. M. Harlan Starr, formerly manager of the Washington Theatre, is to manage the new Madison.

Woods of Triangle Busy Man

Frank E. Woods, manager of production at the Triangle-Fine Arts studio in Los Angeles, is the author of four of the recent and forthcoming releases staged at the plant. Woods wrote "The Bad Boy," in which Robert Harron is being starred, "Betsy's Burglar," the second starring vehicle of Constance Talmadge, and "A Young Gentleman of the Old School," the itinerant drama upon which Robert Harron is now engaged. In addition he is responsible for the social drama in which Seena Owen's return to the films will be signalized.

Large Richmond Theatre Planned

A new theatre to be devoted to motion pictures, and which will be the largest house in the South, is being planned by Jake and Otto Wells, of Richmond, to replace the old Colonial at Eighth and Broad streets, that city.

Advance plans show an imposing structure with modern store fronts on the lower floor, executive office above, and the interior as a playhouse, which will seat eighteen hundred people. These plans call for all that is modern in theatrical buildings.

Film Folk Make Merry at Ball of Jacksonville S. C.

An attendance of three thousand, many from distant Florida towns and cities, made the first annual ball of the Screen Club of Jacksonville on February 12 one of the social events of the year.

Victor Moore and Emma Littlefield led the grand march. The Japanese and Chinese decorations which made the ball room a flowery garden spot were arranged by T. Justin Dow, Kalem studio manager and Mr. Moore. A motion picture was made of the affair. A feature of the ball was the Fortune Dance, during which $650 in prizes was given away to dancers.

Among those who were present were: Kate Price, Viola Dana, Mabel Taliaferro, Anna Little, Grace Darmond, Theda Bara (en veil), Beatrice Joy, Morgan Jones, George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby, Corra Beach, Walter Shumway, David Thompson, Eugene French, Louise Westner, Wray Physioc, C. A. (Doc) Willat, George de Carleton, B. A. Rolfe, J. H. Collins, J. W. Noble, Gordon Edwards, Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Babe Hardy acted as floor manager and William McKee, president of the Screen Club, was master of ceremonies, and this team working in unity saw that no phase of the evening's entertainment was overlooked, and that contributed largely to the affair's success.

Open Market Booking for the Strand, Buffalo

On March 1 the Strand theatre, Buffalo, will change its policy and enter the open market for its attractions, dropping the Paramount program which it has shown for nearly two years. Among the attractions so far booked are Metro, Pathe and Universal features, while "The Crisis" is one of the big March attractions. Manager Earl L. Crabb, in announcing the change in policy, is confident that patrons will be greatly pleased.

The Paramount program in Buffalo goes to Shea's Hippodrome, which is now showing Triangle pictures. The opening attraction at the Strand, under the new policy, is William Courtleigh in "Kick In," followed by Ethel Barrymore in "The Awakening of Helen Ritchie," and Mary MacLaren in "The Mysterious Mrs. M——."

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Honor System"

(William Fox Special—Ten Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

DRURY LANE in all its prime never gave birth to a more sensational melodrama than "The Honor System." When the first New York exhibition was given on Lincoln's Birthday it was profusely punctuated with applause which came not from the customary papered house of a picture's premiere but from people who had paid cash at the box office. It seems that R. A. Walsh, the director, must needs have taken the "average picture fan," if there really is such a thing, as the person to be entertained by his production. At least, we can assume that the average picture fan as a definite substance embodies the desires of every person that attends the picture theatre. And "The Honor System" has everything for every one. It makes you laugh, it makes you cry,

The Pardon Refused

it makes you thrill for the welfare of its hero, it makes you love the heroine, it makes you hiss at the villains and, still further, it preaches prison reform by the most dramatic method—contrast.

To see Joseph Stanton and his hundreds of prison companions being flogged at the stake, thrown into cells reeking with filth, darkness and snakes, and breaking loaves of bread which are no more than maggots' nests; to see Stanton collapse and cry in the Governor's arms when at last that gentleman has investigated his prison is sufficient excuse for the most unemotional individual to wipe his eyes without pretending to blow his nose. Afterwards when the selfsame men are shown in light, airy cells, working in congenial surroundings and being treated in every respect like human beings you can't blame yourself at all for getting up and cheering with the rest of them. And in all probability when you go home you'll sit down and write a letter to the Governor or newspaper, signed "An Advocate of Prison Reform." Mr. Walsh has not colored the awfulness of his prison scenes with anything more than the situations of his story. For the pictures of the model prison he was indebted to George W. P. Hunt, first Governor of Arizona, who led the fight to wipe out the barbaric prison regime, formerly in sway in that state.

Mr. Walsh secured a basis for his picture from a story by Henry Christeen Warnack. Just where the work of the author ends and that of the adaptor and director begins is a problem not to be solved by one who has not read the story. However, from all appearances, Mr. Walsh fixed things up pretty much to suit himself or rather as said before the average picture fan. It is nearly five reels before Stanton is arrested. This introductory footage is taken up with something of a laborious preface to the plot proper. In it there is a surprisingly fierce raid of Mexicans on an American border town depicted merely so that one man may be killed in order to throw Stanton with the woman who causes him to commit a murder. Both the cause and the crime might have been consummated in double-quick time, and as the first act of the picture only ends with Stanton's trial and conviction, it leaves a state of "well, bring on your 'Honor System,'" in the mouth when you go out to have a smoke. But though lacking in plot development, this first act is a marvel of sensational incident, including some quite wonderful horseback riding and several flashes of fighting. The Mexicans are banished by a new troop that sweeps on to the scene behind an American flag.

Thereafter, though, the plot is never lacking in swift movement. There is the mad dash of the prisoners for liberty, an awful fight in an underworld "joint" between rival factions and a fight of words in the State Senate between the Governor and the villainous Senator, which ends by the latter gentleman being forcibly ejected by the "bouncer" of the chamber to the accompaniment of hisses and oaths from the gallery. A pardon for Stanton is not lacking, which removes all obstacles between him and Edith. The last act (there are three in all) is to tell the truth very obvious to even the untrained eye. You know that the Senator will attempt to make Stanton betray his trust and you know that he will eventually triumph with his pardon and his girl, but after all it is just such things as this that alternately bring out the tears and smiles.

The cast of "The Honor System" is excellent. Milton Sills as Stanton creates an appealing character by an emotional performance restrained to a perfect degree. Miriam Cooper as Edith has never been seen to such good advantage. Every scene of hers is natural. The big moments of her role are many and she goes through with them always with such an appreciation for their true significance that you quite forget the fact that she is acting. Charles Clary is the villainous Senator to a degree, Arthur Mackley is happily cast as the sheriff and Gladys Brockwell creates a realistic impression as a dance-hall girl. The large number of supernumeraries have been handled to excellent effect. Mr. Walsh's direction is marked throughout by special attention to detail and to intimate scenes connected with various of the characters. The closeup is used well. The domestic animal and the mouse and the cockroach (the latter bug being used by the convicts in the old prison as messenger) comes in for a considerable share of the closeup but not for a boresome number.

"The Honor System" seems due for an indefinite run in New York. It should have them elsewhere, too. So melodramatic and with such a popular appeal it should pack them in whether it play in big city or small town. It is a rare thing in these days when an audience is so carried away by the picture that it claps the hero and hisses the villain. "The Honor System" makes them do it, and do it time and again.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Joseph Stanton (Milton Sills) kills a man in self-defense, and owing to inadequate evidence is sent to prison for life. He finds the warden of the penetentiary (P. J. Cannon) nothing more than a brute, and after terrible abuse sends a note to the Governor (James A. Marcus) asking his aid. The Governor comes to inspect and as a result the Honor System is installed. Steven Holt (Arthur Mackley) is made warden and his daughter, Edith (Miriam Cooper) lives near the prison. A friendship that soon turns to love develops between Stanton and Edith. Stanton, under the new regime is allowed to continue work on his invention of a wireless attachment. The conspiring Senator (Charles Clary) arranges for him to go on parole for three days in order to make practical experiments with his instrument and plans to make him prisoner while away and so prove the falsity of the Honor System. The Governor is so sure that Stanton will return that he gives his word that he will do away with the system providing Stanton fail him. The Senator and the ex-warden, together with their associates attempt several times to keep Stanton from getting back in time, but just when Holt and his daughter have given him up he staggers in, saving the System and incidentally earning for himself a pardon—and Edith.

"A Mormon Maid"

(Friedman-Hiller & Wilk-States Rights—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

DEALING with Mormonism at the period of its height, in the year 1848, this picture seems perfectly suited to the requirements of the states rights man. Well produced and setting forth a theme that will undoubtedly evoke considerable comment due to its innumerable revelations of the laws of the Mormon faith, it carries advertising possibilities manifold within its footage. Commercially worthy its artistic merit is no less prominent. The story by Paul West itself contains a wonderfully strong plot that possesses several moments of the greatest dramatic power. In its production Robert Leonard has utilized the artistic prerogative of the director to good effect chiefly in his panoramic scenes. The groupings of the Destroying Angels, the fight between the Mormons and the Indians and the attempted escape of Hogue and his daughter are events that are handled superbly and create a strong measure of suspense.

Dora in the House of Burr's Wives

The cast of the play does capable work. Mae Murray in the title role, though her tendency to become Pickfordian was never more prominent, creates an appealing character in the shape of Dora. Hobart Bosworth has a strong role as her father, who, by his fierce fight against the unjust principles of Mormonism is constantly the center of admiration. Edythe Chapman as his wife, plays here one big scene before she passes from the story in a style that makes it the strongest moment in the picture. The players have been directed after the customary Lasky fashion in that they continually approach the foreground, where the full significance of their every expression and sometimes the falsities of their makeup are magnified.

A glance at the story will convince the reader of its strength. That the marriage episode should in any way work to the ill repute of the theatre is hardly a matter for argument. It is done nicely and the lie told by Dora is justified when stock is taken of her hopeless plight.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dora (Mae Murray), the daughter of the Hogues (Hobart Bosworth and Eythe Chapman), who live in a Mormon metropolis, loves Tom Ridgon (Frank Borzage), a young follower of the Faith, who is unacquainted with its darker side. Darius Burr (Noah Beery), a leading figure in the church looks with covetous eyes on Dora, and to gain his point forces Hogue to accept the Faith by marrying him a second time. This so affects Nancy Hogue that she takes her life. As a consequence Hogue, Tom and Dora attempt escape, but are prevented by the Destroying Angels, who forever guard the outskirts of the city. Hogue is believed to have been killed and the young couple are taken captives.

Darius then attempts to force Dora to marry him and she, seeking the only avenue of escape declares in public that she is not a virgin. Enraged Darius has the girl taken prisoner and brought to him at a certain place. Hogue, who has not died, appears in the uniform of the Destroying Angels and with the help of Tom rescues Dora and kills Darius. They are then able to escape from the grip of the Mormons.

"Patria"

(International-Pathe—Seventh Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS all good episodes should, this number of "Patria," bearing the title of "Red Dawn," ends with a smash. Patria in order to prevent a car of dynamite from running wild stalls her car on the track, with the consequence that the rolling stock is derailed to crash to the ground and explode. A very well done scene is this and its effect just about wipes out the amateurish manner in which Patria crossed in front of the freight car in a preceding scene. There are also some fine fire scenes in "Red Dawn," realistic to the last degree.

THE STORY

Patria, still impersonating the dead dancer, Elaine, is successful in making Baron Huroki and the other conspirators believe her the real article. They plot to blow up the Channing munition works upon discovering that Captain Parr stands between them and their practical possession of them. For this reason is the freight car and its explosive contents let loose on the track, and is only prevented from reaching its intended goal by Patria's deed. But due to the further plotting of Baron Huroki, the munition works are destroyed by fire started by the striking workers.

"The Boy Girl"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ON looking upon "The Boy Girl" one is forced to come to the conclusion that the photoplay audience must appreciate elementals. At least the author, John C. Brownell, would have you believe so. There is much action in it, but it gives the appearance of having been derived from many stock plots. There is the girl brought up as a boy, her marriage merely to save a young fellow from ruin, a chase to get possession of the oil land before the opposition arrives, and the final love of the husband and wife, neither of which realized the true state of affairs before.

Edwin Stevens in the production of the picture has carried out the designs of the author to a corresponding degree. Whatever the character of the situation, he has dealt with it in a strictly conventional fashion, unhampered by any great show of originality. Mr. Stevens's first picture, a two-reeler, seems to have set a mark which he cannot attain again. Furthermore, the profuse use of backdrops in his picture emphasizes its stiltedness. In some instances subtitles have been superimposed over a scene in motion and no one has exercised the proper regard for the lights and shades of the words and the backgrounds. In some instances individual letters are invisible.

Violet Mersereau gives a capricious performance in the title part. She plays the boy girl with a sufficient show of boyishness and an adequate touch of femininity. Her bright and happy personality will naturally please her admirers, and if the shortcomings of the picture may be overlooked it will win her new followers. Her supporting cast performs rather poorly as a whole. There are a couple of good characterizations given, but the majority of the minor players are at a loss while before the lens.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Jack" Channing (Violet Mersereau) after the death of her father comes to live with her two maiden aunts in the city. Here she meets Bob Ridgway (Sidney Mason), but shortly afterwards leaves for boarding school. Running away, she secures a position with Ridgway and his father (Dean Raymond). She discovers that the secretary of the company (James O'Neill) is a crook and gives away valuable secrets to the opposition. When the Ridgways approach a financial crisis "Jack" marries Bob that he may have the use of her money. She succeeds in beating the rival company to the oil lands, and afterwards comes her revelation of an artist who has evil designs toward her husband's sister as a libertine. The doubt in Bob's mind changes to love and admiration when he discovers the true worth of his wife.

"Two Men and a Woman"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is nothing extremely exciting in watching a skyscraper being built story by story. But the innocent bystander would get a lot of thrills if an anarchist came along and blew it up.

A Moment of Admiration

The process of building "Two Men and a Woman" up to the point where the figurative bomb is introduced is somewhat tedious. You see a little too much of the detail of the affair. The closeups are in the majority over the full sets to such an extent that the continuity is interrupted. But when the fall comes it comes with a vengeance. The last two reels spell dramatic strength all over themselves. If there are no thrills to be derived from them there are no more thrills.

"Two Men and a Woman" was written by the busy Willard Mack. He has handled a conventional story in a powerful way when it comes to the latter part of the picture. Whether he was responsible for the superfluity of closeups in the beginning and the introduction of a character in the shape of Miss Steele, who never gets to the midst of the plot is a question. Mayhap Director William Humphrey did the tricks. Miss Rubye de Remer receives a healthy portion of the closeups. She is pretty and a blonde, wears good clothes, photographs well and poses attractively in them. Miss Helen Arnold, pretty, and a brunette, runs second only to Miss de Remer in this matter. Pretty closeups though don't sustain the interest.

Perhaps the last two reels will offset the other three before an audience. They did with us anyway. Two remarkably fine characterizations rendered by James Morrison and Guy Combs contribute much to the strength of the picture after its turning point. The situations pictured then are dramatic in themselves and bring the story to a highly satisfying finish. In directing Mr. Humphrey has dissolved the majority of his scenes into one another. This practice is not new, although it is safe to say it has never been utilized so extensively as in this case. A slight confusion is sometimes the result particularly when the dissolve is employed in its customary capacity of introducing past action.

To those who would know whether Mr. Abramson's latest production is highly seasoned, we reply in the affirmative. It is not, however, offensive, and should pass even Pennsylvania without creating a ripple.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bruce Donaldson (Guy Coombs) loves Ethel Walling (Rubye de Remer), but when his nephew (James Morrison) arrives on the scene gracefully withdraws in his favor. The nephew, Tony, has a college past in which Wanda (Christine Mayo) is the prime mover. When she hears of his engagement she starts to blackmail. Tony invites Mark Hornback (John Reinhard) to his uncle's home and borrows some money while Mark makes off with Bruce's submarine plans. In this manner Bruce discovers all about the affair and for the love of Ethel agrees to compromise himself with Wanda to defeat her blackmailing tactics. He is successful, but Wanda suddenly turns the tables by lauding Bruce for the man that he is, opening Tony's eyes to the fact that Ethel really loves his uncle and making a good job of it by disappearing. Then Tony has the graciousness to withdraw in Bruce's favor.

"Pearl of the Army"

(Pathe—Twelfth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IF the devotees of the serial hanker after thrills, and from the best accounts they do, this episode, entitled "The Foreign Alliance," may well be described as fulfilling its mission to a T. The spectacle of all the villainous members of the Alliance going to their death in a submarine destroyed by fire from a United States revenue cutter is about as sensational as the most rabid fan could demand. The episode is realistically done and followers of the serial will no doubt be moved to applause.

THE STORY

Pearl secrets herself aboard the ship belonging to the Silent Menace and overhears the plans to blow up the canal. She is surprised to find Adams on the ship too and believes him a member of the foreign band despite his assurance to the contrary. Pearl manages to throw a note out in a bottle telling her father of the fact that the Foreign Alliance is to sail for the Canal Zone, and as a consequence the submarine in which the conspirators embark is fired upon and sunk. Pearl, still believing Adams faithless, is told to look through into the next cabin, where she sees the Silent Menace in a conference.

"Her Beloved Enemy"

(Thanhouser-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A MYSTERY picture by Lloyd Lonergan is this latest Pathe feature produced by the Thanhouser Company. A strong vein of suspense is set up at the start by the reference of some of the characters to past history, the ins and out of which the spectator is not allowed to see. It is maintained through to the last by the ingenious work of the author who has allowed no hint to drop as to the nature of the mystery. He has indeed worked coincidence over-severely during the course of the picture and there are several situations, such as the escape of the secret service men from the consulate, that lack plausibility. Then, too, the close of the picture has not the force consistent with the mystic excellence of the beginning. But with the case of "Her Beloved Enemy" it is the beginning that counts the heavier. The picture may be open to the thrusts of the dramatic critic, but popular appeal often puts such criticism to rout. And we think it will prove a convincing argument in this picture's behalf.

Doris Grey and Wayne Arey have the leading roles and perform pleasingly, though never do they go so far as to display brilliance. In this case the real work was up to the author and he has done it well, being ably assisted by Director Ernest Warde. The photography was good in all but a small minority of the scenes in the print viewed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sylvia Leigh (Doris Grey) comes home from boarding school to find her father (J. H. Gilmour) in the grip of fear due to some veiled event that has occurred in the past. He dies shortly, leaving Sylvia to seek out the "man who ruined his life." Sylvia seeks and shortly meets with a mysterious gentleman (Wayne Arey), with whom she falls in love. Later she discovers him to be the man she seeks. Robbing the consulate of a foreign power he is aided in escape by Sylvia, who afterwards, against the dictates of her heart, turns him over to the secret service, but these gentlemen greet him warmly as one of their own number, and after all it develops that Sylvia's father was a spy working against the interests of the country.

"The Heart of Texas Ryan"

(Selig-K-E-S-E—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

IF you want a film antidote for sex, morbidity, and problems, here it is. "The Heart of Texas Ryan" has more variety than a vaudeville bill and more action than a pack of firecrackers. It is a Western of the very best type, and it is well calculated to entertain everybody from litle Johnny to his venerable granddad.

The impressive cast of stars should be enough to get the people into your theatre, and the quality of the film will satisfy them after they get in. There is a plot of reasonable youth, excellent acting, genuine comedy, and commendable directing. The exteriors are fine. In fact, the only point that invites criticism is the photography, which is fair, but not equal to the other factors of the picture.

The advertising possibilities of the cast should not be overlooked. The stars are George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton, Frank Campeau, and Tom Mix. Others who take part are William Rhino, Charles Gerrard, and Goldie Colwell. E. A. Martin was the director.

A Saloon Fracas

THE STORY

Colonel William Ryan, a Lone Star State ranch owner, names his daughter Texas Ryan. She is the idol of the cowboys, and is especially worshipped by Jack Parker, the head cowpuncher. Texas is also courted by Moreno, the Mexican head of a gang of bandits.

Parker goes on a spree and incurs the enmity of McAllister, the town marshal and secret ally of Moreno. Parker saves Texas from Moreno's unwelcome attentions and so wins the hatred of the Mexican. McAllister and Moreno combine to kidnap Texas and steal her father's cattle. Their plots are all thwarted by Parker's ingenuity and daring. (These various plots and counter-plots create a lot of excitement and make possible a series of excellent riding, roping and shooting stunts.)

Parker is finally captured by Moreno and is about to be shot, when Texas saves him after a wild ride across the desert. She offers Parker her life and her heart, both of which are gratefully accepted by the cowboy.

"The Black Rider"

(American Girl Series—Kalem—Two Reels)
(REVIEWED BY GEORGE WORTS

THE first of a new Kalem series, with a star who is well known and well liked, promises to hold forth a definite and substantial box-office inducement. "The Black Rider" falls within the familiar and long popular category of "Western stuff." The tiresome galloping scenes which abounded when Western films enjoyed the first blossom of their popularity, and which did more than anything else to win disfavor for that species, are entirely lacking. Action and suspense are well under way within the first twenty-five feet.

The Black Rider Works Rapidly

While the old-fashioned Western picture relied chiefly for its punch upon a stage coach hold-up, "The Black Rider" opens with the scene. The rest of the episode deals with unspinning the mystery of the highwayman's identity.

The discerning audience has a pretty fair notion from the outset who the robber is, but the people in the picture—our hero and heroine—don't, and there lies the suspense.

The two reels are packed full of interest. As a week-to-week attraction "The American Girl" will draw strongly, especially in the smaller towns.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Madge King, the American Girl (Marin Sais) becomes interested in the activities of a highway robber, "The Black Rider" (Ronald Bradbury). She gallops after the coach on one of its trips, followed by her father (Frank Jonasson) and a man of the cowboy type who loves her. The masked robber holds up the coach and in escaping drops his mask, which the girl picks up, discovering that it is a striped stocking. The robber escapes and suspicion is cast upon a certain "Wild Bill," upon whose person is found a pearl necklace. In a subsequent chase the black rider is caught by the girl. His mask is torn away and the sneering countenance of a well respected villager is revealed.

"The Gentle Intruder"

(American-Mutual—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THIS is a typical Mary Miles Minter-Cinderella production. By this we mean that the diminutive star has the same tribulations that she has encountered so many times in the celluloid. She is the heiress who happens to be a servant in the house of the very people who have robbed her. She is abused by these people.

Her innocence reforms wickedness. The son of the house falls in love with her. Her naïveté gets her into a compromising position She finally wins the love of everybody and obtains her fortune.

These plot high-lights have been incorporated into nearly every picture starring Miss Minter. They will probably continue to form the foundation of Minter releases, because these circumstances are ideal for displaying the star's youth, wistfulness, and engaging mannerisms. The public would probably resent seeing Miss Minter in a different kind of role, just as it wants Maude Adams to play nothing but Peter Pan.

If you want an actual comparison, the writer believes that the picture under discussion is superior in production and appeal to "Youth's Enduring Young Charm," "Faith," and "The Innocence of Lizette." It compares favorably to "A Dream or Two Ago" in every respect except the humorous element.

To be more specific, Miss Minter's attraction is just as marked in this picture as it has been in any of her films. Her support, consisting of George Fisher, Franklin Ritchie, Eugenie Forde, and Harvey Clarke is unusually good. James Kirkwood's directing is excellent. The sets and exteriors are most effective and are enhanced by splendid photography. The plot is a Minter plot.

"The Terror"

(Red Feather-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE TERROR" is the story of an East Side gunman who is reformed by the interest taken in him by a Salvation Army lassie and the trust of a little child. Reformed, yes, but with his reformation comes his death, and there is none of the milky happy ending. Written and produced by Raymond Wells. "The Terror" relies for the most part on its underworld scenes, which are in every instance superbly lighted for its effect. You never get really sympathetic with the gunman because he has half a dozen murders chalked up on the ledger and never does anything toward reformation except to push a tough away who attempts to break up a meeting of the Salvation Army.

Jack Mulhall tries sincerely to be a convincing gangster, but never succeeds, for the most part creating an impression of amateurishness. The cast includes a variety of players, every one of whom attempts to be a "type." They succeed only fairly well, some of the more prominent members of the cast giving the impression of artificiality. The various character roles are played by Jack Mulhall, Hugh Hoffman, Grace MacLean, Virginia Lee, Noble Johnson, Jean Hersholt and Evelyn Selbie.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The story goes into the detail of the life of "Chuck" Connelly, the gunman, and after depicting various of his murderous enterprises follows him to the district attorney's home, where he has been sent to put him out of the way. At the last moment he quits the job. Three of his accomplices waiting outside sense the situation and enter, intending to finish the thing up themselves. Chuck defends the attorney and saves his life at the sacrifice of his own.

"The Girl and the Crisis"

(Red Feather-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

PRESENTING an argument against capital punishment, "The Girl and the Crisis" is, aside from this, a weak picture. The plot lacks any deft dramatic touches and William V. Mong in his dual capacity of author and director has not familiarized his audience with his characters. The personal interest is lacking. In the scenes where he has attempted to handle mobs he has fallen down in point of realism for he has peopled expansive areas with mere handfuls of supernumeraries.

What little strength that the picture possesses lies wholly in the dream of the governor wherein he sees his father as a murderer and is called upon to sign his death warrant. Acting on his dream, the executive commutes the sentence of a real murderer. In such a way does he defy capital punishment. This reformation of the governor's is, of course, brought on through the simplest channels. But we think if the average person sat in a governor's chair it wouldn't take even a dream to convince him of the vital wrong of this method of meting out justice. A better story might have been written round the same theme. The love between the governor and Ellen is an affair that contains no interesting moments, and as it is given so little space it never adds suspense to the main story. Neither is the political battle between the fathers of the two younger people ever clear in either cause or effect. To all appearances it was merely introduced to afford some character acting.

There are no honors in the way of histrionic endeavor to be shared. Charles Perley fails to impress as the governor and Mr. Mong in character as the father appears only seldom. Dorothy Davenport as the heroine and Harry Holden as her father do sincere work which might have been effective under a better production than that existing.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The governor of the state refuses to call out the militia to suppress strike riots and a fanatic shoots and kills him, thus making Barnitz (Charles Perley) the state's chief executive. In determining whether he shall let the murderer suffer death by the chair or whether he shall commute his sentence, Barnitz dreams of being called on to pass judgment upon his father (Mr. Mong) in a like position. Rather than take his life he takes his own. Waking up,

After the Assassination

he decides, urged on by his fiancee, to modify the murderer's sentence to life imprisonment. He does at the last moment, but the strain has been too great and the condemned man dies from heart failure.

"The Little Brother"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A STAR newly come to the screen must run the gamut of the scenario writers' bag of tricks. Enid Bennett did the blind girl first and in "The Little Brother" she does the boy girl. We expect her in the dual role before many more pictures pass. Concerning "The Little Brother" on its own qualifications, enthusiastic terms have small part in a review. Miss Bennett is an attractive young lady at the least, but as a boy she fails to create much of an impression. She is like other actresses who essay such a part—obviously and certainly a girl. That the hero couldn't see through the deception displays a lack of acumen on his part. Afterwards you don't wonder why he was never successful in discovering the formula for dissolving opals from their stony settings.

Lois Zellner wrote the story. It is in the main as familiar as its central figure. The author has had recourse to various means to stretch it over the required space. The padding is of itself generally attractive and if Miss Bennett has acquired a sufficient following that will be pleased at whatever she does it will be greeted with appreciation. Charles Miller who directed Miss Bennett's former picture, "The Princess of the Dark," did this one also and has done his usual effective work.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jerry Ross (Enid Bennett), dressed as a boy, sells papers on the street until one day a fight with a contemporary is the cause of her meeting Frank Girard (William Garwood). Girard believing her a real "he" adopts her and sends her to boarding school. She soon discloses the fact that she is a girl to the headmaster and is straightway put in the girls' division. In the meantime Frank works in his laboratory in an attempt to discover the right compound to dissolve the stone from opals. Her schooling over, Jerry joins him again, for the first time revealing herself to him as a girl. Jerry is at last the one who discovers the correct formula and then starts to leave, for she believes Frank loves another. Frank pursues and arrives when a villain is forcing unwelcome attentions on her. After that they live happily.

"The Man Who Took a Chance"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

WHAT seems to be going to be a commonplace story turns a complete surprise on the audience, which we believe as a whole will like this picture. The story largely concerns the not new idea of impersonating an English lord in order to get into the good graces of a newly rich family whose daughter is beautiful and fascinating. The work of Franklyn Farnum in the duplex role of an American wanderer, alias Lord Winston Radleigh, is excellent. He carries the part with restraint and makes very probable the happenings that follow.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When Monty (Franklyn Farnum) arrives from China the very first vision of white femininity looks good to him. His friend Wilbur Mason knows the girl and gives him a card of introduction, with a tip that the girl is afflicted with the "title bug."

Monty advertises for an English valet and has cards printed with the fine sounding title "Lord Winston Radleigh."

A complication of robberies, another fake "duke" as guest at the same house party to which Monty butts in, and a ruse put up by Constance (Agnes Vernon) to test his American manhood, starts things going in the last few hundred feet with a real vim. Monty, single-handed, batters up a succession of cowboys and other huskies who shoot at him and are shot at by him with semi-ludicrous effect until the mystery is cleared. They all had blank cartridges. But the "hero" got the best of the argument, as shown by broken wrists, sore heads, etc. Lloyd Whitlock, Marc Fenton, Agnes Vernon, Charley Perley, Arthur Hoyt and Countess Du Cello complete the cast.

"Cupid's Thumbprint"

(Selig—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

REEKING with melodrama, this release is highly reminiscent of the bygone, ten, twent', thirt' days. It will appeal to the audience that used to hiss the villain when that beetle-browed character trod the boards. The heroine is beautiful and good, likewise the hero, but the heavy is fiendish wickedness personified. The "papers" figure prominently.

The players leave nothing to the imagination, preferring to make every point plain even to the dullest intelligence. The fan who has no use for subtleties of expression or shades of character delineation will be greatly pleased with the methods employed by the cast. Those who appear are Frank Hamilton, Maybelle Spaulding, Ward Wing, Willard Burke, and Roy Sutherland. Otis Thayer directed.

THE STORY

Prewitt, a social gangster, tries to marry Irma Fairchild for her money. She refuses him, so he robs her safe. Breen, a burglar, also tries to rob the safe, but finds it empty. As he is leaving the house, Breen comes upon Irma struggling in Prewitt's embrace, and saves her. Her beauty causes Breen to reform, and he works as a butler in Irma's house. He saves his heroine from Prewitt several times, and the parasite finally accuses him of robbing the safe. But Breen exposes Prewitt's crime, confesses his own guilt, and marries Irma.

"Stagestruck"

(Fine Arts-Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WITH a story of immature proportions "Stagestruck" is partially enlivened by two or three good characterizations. Dorothy Gish, as the girl, who envies those who tread the boards makes an attractive figure of the chief role. We think Spottiswoode Aitken as the wabbly old judge will get a laugh whenever he appears. There are minor players who contribute colorful bits too. Victor Rottman, as the stagestruck youth, dominates a good many scenes with some good playing. Then there is the vaudeville trio of the boarding house and the "ham" actress who thinks she's another Bernhardt, but we don't get enough of them.

As for the picture in the main there are laughs in it, but no big show of breath-catching drama. The laughs are largely due to the subtitles which contain various slang phrases hung together in a ridiculously funny style and spelt in capitals. In this latter respect they resemble the humor of George Ade. "Hell Hath No Fury Like a Grocer Boy Scorned" is perhaps indicative of the style dominant in the lot.

The scenario, by Roy Somerville, was picturized with a fine regard for appropriate atmosphere by Edward Morrissey.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ruth (Dorothy Gish) comes to the city to finish her course in a fake dramatic school run by Jake Schneider (Fred Warren). In a theatrical boarding house, run by Mrs. Teedles (Jennie Lee), she meets Jack Martin (Frank Bennett), a rich fellow, who has run away from home because his mother doesn't give him any attention. They are married by an ex-judge (Spottiswoode Aitken). Shortly afterwards Schneider's dramatic school is broken up by the postal authorities and the married pair are separated. But there is a reunion, which is duly sanctioned by Jack's mother after she learns it is useless to interfere.

"Kitty Mackay"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

AS a drama Catherine Cushing's play pleased, and in picture form Lillian Walker and an unusually strong cast of Vitagraph players give a most pleasing revival. The moods of the principal role call for Miss Walker to do considerably more than just look pretty in the picture, and she registers the widely different requirements of a much-abused orphan girl and a rich man's pet equally well. Charles Kent and William Shea as Lord Inglehart and MacGregor are absolutely true to type.

Kitty Mackay is one of those thoroughly wholesome stories that pleases almost any character of audience, and the production is entirely worthy the star and producing company. The direction and photography are very creditable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kitty Mackay (Lillian Walker) and her chum Mag (Jewell Hunt) are seen in their poor Scotch home, where MacGregor (William Shea) and his wife (Mrs. Nellie Anderson) live off the five pounds a month which regularly comes from England. There is no love between Kitty and the foster parents.

Her guardian, Lord Inglehart (Charles Kent) comes for Kitty on her eighteenth birthday, and it is not long before his son (Don Cameron) falls in love with Kitty. Lord Inglehart is shocked at this denouement, for Kitty is his own child, he believes, and he has regretted all his life that Kitty's mother did not know that he really had not deserted her before the babe was born. It seems, however, that the MacGregors had substituted another for the real baby Kitty, who died, in order that they might continue to receive the five pounds.

This is learned by Lord Inglehart and a happy consent is given to the marriage of the two lovers, between whom no longer is the barrier of too close relationship.

"The Winning of Sally Temple"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

FANNIE WARD has an excellent opportunity to display her talents in this pictured version of Rupert Sargent Holland's novel, but the important fact is that it is a costume drama, of early English period, and in the part of Sally Temple of Pump Lane, famous actress, Miss Ward is obliged to assume the airs and grace of an English lady.

The play is also enlivened by some realistic fights in which Billy

Lord Romsey Proves Himself a Handy Citizen

Elmer as an English prizefighter is the one member of the cast who makes an unforgettable impression.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sally Temple (Fannie Ward), famous actress of Drury Lane theatre, finds her home and companions in "Pump Lane," which locality the Duke of Chatto (Walter Long) has burdened with unfair taxation. Sally is the angel of charity to these people. In the meantime Lady Pamela (Vola Vale), the ward of Lord Romsey (Jack Dean), is in danger of losing her estate for having married without Romsey's consent, and Sally is persuaded to impersonate her to Romsey for three weeks.

When the high strung temperaments of Lord Romsey and Sally clash, sparks fly, but Lord Romsey realizes he has for the first time met a real woman. He follows Sally and Jellitt (Paul Weigel), a prizefighter, who has come to Sally's protection against Romsey, to Pump Lane. There he hires out to the local blacksmith as a helper, meets and woos Sally incognito, and finally gets the chance to prove his true spirit when Sally is attacked by Chatto. A fight ensues, and Romsey, after he and Jellitt have "cleaned up" the Duke and all his retinue, humbles the Duke and forces him to sell him "Pump Lane," which he gives to Sally as his bridal offering.

"The Scarlet Letter"

(Fox—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

IN the "Scarlet Letter," Nathaniel Hawthorne has left to posterity one of the strongest stories of a struggle with conscience ever written. This immortal classic is revered by millions, and offers material for most powerful photodramatic visualization. To those familiar with the book, the introduction of Indian voodoo men, burning witches at the stake, and the getting rid of the villain by having him seized by a pirate crew and made to walk the plank, will seem absolute sacrilege. To others, the present picture version will be deemed a very fine production.

It will be remembered that the strong climax of the book was the declaration of guilt by Dimmesdale in the public market place, as a dying message, after which, much in the manner of present day plays, we are told Hester lived a happier life, and little Pearl grew into beautiful womanhood, and was loved and happily married.

God's comforting peace, and the woman's chastening by the man's sacrifice of life itself to conscience, was the keynote of Hawthorne's story, a woman's love lifting him out of physical and mental weakness. This is entirely lost in the pictured story.

Of staging, acting, production generally, and especially the finely realistic presentation of old New England times, we can speak a cordial appreciation. The play has excellent dramatic quality as presented, and will doubtless have a wide popularity. But the finest underlying inspiration of the book is at least in important degree nullified in the changed climax.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Hester Prynne (Mary Martin) has been forced to carry as an emblem of her fallen character, a scarlet "A"; Arthur Dimmesdale (Stuart Holmes), the respected minister of the little Puritan colony, is the guilty man, whom Hester refuses to implicate. Chillingsworth (Dan Mason), Hester's husband, discovers the secret, and, as Satan incarnate, becomes Dimmesdale's personal physician and tormentor. After seven years of mental torture, Dimmesdale is about to go mad with his secret repentance, when a pirate captain impresses Chillingsworth, who is later forced to walk the plank, and Dimmesdale rescues Hester from being burned at the stake as a witch, bearing his own breast to show a branded sign of his guilt, which they will henceforth bear together.

"America Is Ready"

(Max Cohen State Rights—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THIS is a patriotic picture, designed to meet the immediate demand for any well photographed worth while pictures of the American soldiers and sailors, and it fills the bill to a T. From clever titling to well-arranged climax, it represents an assembling of guns and men in pictures, that while ordinarily classed as "educational" for the moment are to be classed as much wanted and sure to make a big hit in any house. Four reels is just enough and not too much. There is no padding, not a moment of stalling, and the scenes of cadets at West Point, battleships firing volley after volley of broadside, and sailors and marines making a mock landing (which is the most realistic piece of this sort of business we have seen) are in the "great" class.

It will be seen that the reviewer really enjoyed looking at this picture, and would like to see it as widely circulated as possible because it is going to please, particularly now during these strenuous parlous times when the air is permeated with principles of preparedness and the whole nation alive and on the qui vive wondering what the outcome will be.

The use of a proper crash imitation of big gun firing will bring any audience to its feet with this picture. It is distinctly a picture for the house that wants a patriotic feature to "put over" with all the effects and flag-wavings. Perception of where to stop, however, in using too much flag, is noticeable, and there is not too obvious a use of the "hurrah." The closing scene of the flag, waving in front of the officer's tent, instead of just a flag covering the whole screen, shows the care in presentation noticeable through the entire subject.

"America Is Ready" will just now be received with enthusiasm by any audience, anywhere. It should properly, of course, accompany a dramatic picture, as there is no story to this picture, but present day conditions assure for it a hearty reception everywhere. Each scene is complete. It is not a collection of short flashes such as we are used to seeing in the News Weeklies.

"Beware of Strangers"

(Selig—Eight Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THE story of this feature is based on the sensational crime investigations recently conducted by the federal authorities. The technique of various type of swindlers is exposed, including crooked clairvoyants, "wire-tappers," and Mann Act blackmailers. The machinations of these criminals have been molded into dramatic form and strung together by a thread of narrative. The continuity is rather thin at times, but the subject matter keeps the interest from sagging.

While the picture deals with the underworld, its treatment is consistently delicate, and wholly free from vulgarity or smut. The moral drawn is summarized by the title.

The character of the production makes possible several methods of exploitation. It can be advertised sensationally or conservatively. While it is more of an exposé than straight entertainment, there is yet enough of a story to get the picture into the drama classification. The LaSalle, a big Chicago downtown house, it attracting capacity audiences by advertising the production as a Mann Act sensation. In advertising the feature, it might be well to connect it with some recent local crime by saying that it shows how similar schemes are plotted and executed.

The Selig people did not rush through a half-baked production having novelty as its sole excuse or merit. Instead, "Beware of Strangers" is rather an elaborate picture, showing considerable attention to details. The sets are unusually deep and effective, and other mechanical details are equally worthy.

The cast certainly deserves to be termed "all-star." It includes Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Jack Richardson, Edward Coxen, Fritzie Brunette, Vivian Rich, and Al Filson. The players were all happily cast and they all performed creditably. Colin Campbell directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Mentor (Thomas Santschi), ostensibly a prominent business man, is really the head of a clever crime syndicate. His daughter (Bessie Eyton) finds his real character and leaves him. The syndicate robs Lyttle (Edward Coxen), a small-town banker, by preying on his credulity and greed through a clairvoyant (Jack Richardson), and a crooked "hand-book." His losses cause the bank to fail, and the love of his sweetheart (Fritzie Brunette) changes to hate. She becomes one of the syndicate and revenges herself on Lyttle by making him a tool of the gangsters. Next the criminals send the Lorelei (Vivian Rich) to get a millionaire (Al Filson) in the toils of Mann Act blackmail. Then, unaware of her identity, the syndicate robs Mentor's daughter, and she helps the Government officials to round up the gang. She is heart-broken when she finds that her father is the leader of the gangsters. All the members of the syndicate commit suicide or are arrested.

"A Four-Cent Courtship"

(Essanay—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

HERE is something rare: a polite comedy chuck full of laughable situations, and possessing a novel, unpadded plot. As such, we feel that exhibitors will wecome it.

Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly, supported by a competent cast, get the laughs over handily. The details of production were all very well handled, with the exception of the photography. The directing was fine, and the subtitles are a delight.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Payne (Bryant Washburn), a young clerk, is touched by his roommate for his entire roll, with the exception of four cents. That afternoon Payne loses his job, and faces the prospect of taking his sweetheart (Hazel Daly) to dinner, to the theatre, and to supper—all on four cents. Payne steals two elevated tickets from a fat man, and so gets her downtown. By impersonating a well-known dramatic critic he gets two tickets to a hit, sells them to a speculator for $30, and after buying tickets to another show, has $25 left for meals, taxis, etc.

Everything is rosy until Payne happens to meet the critic he impersonated, the box-office man, and the speculator to whom he sold the tickets. They make a scene, but Payne finds his roommate and he reimburses them. His girl is outraged at his conduct, but he smooths that over and gets a job.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR BUSY EXHIBITORS

General Film Program

"For Reward of Service." (Selig. Sat., Feb. 17.)—This is distinctly a release of merit. The story is unhackneyed, and it is a one-reeler with a real star (George Fawcett)—an unusual thing in itself. Others in the cast are Mrs. Evelyn, Charles Gardner, and Charles Le Moyne. "For Reward of Service" will fit smoothly into practically any program. "Cross Allen" is a grouchy old bookkeeper. His peevishness annoys his office mates, so they plan a Christmas practical joke. They wrap up bricks and other junk, and present them to Allen as Christmas presents. The old man is much touched, and takes the gifts home to show his wife. Then the other clerks discover that Allen's misanthropy was caused by a succession of family tragedies. They hurriedly buy some real presents and substitute them for the bogus ones.

"A Four Cent Courtship." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Feb. 20.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Canimated Nooz Pictorial, No. 25." (Essanay. Split reel. Wed., Feb. 21.)—Wallace A. Carlson's animated cartoon burlesque of the news weeklies, together with half a reel of British Columbia scenic.

"The Extravagant Bride." "Is Marriage Sacred?" series. (Essanay. Two reels. Sat., Feb. 24.)—Not shown for review; the story follows: Allison is brought to the edge of bankruptcy by the extravagances of his wife Edith. At a party, Spencer, a former suitor of Edith's, puts a purse in Allison's pocket and accuses him of stealing it. Edith is in despair, thinking that her extravagance has led her husband to theft. But one of the guests witnessed Spencer's act, and Allison is exonerated. The cast is composed of Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford.

"The Screened Vault." (Kalem. Episode of "Grant, Police Reporter." Two reels.)—The interest of this dramatic serial is well sustained by the thrilling adventures of George Larkin, who endeavors successfully to frustrate bank robbers. As he is making a bank deposit, plaster falls from the ceiling overhead, attracting his attention. When he investigates the office above the bank, that evening, he is captured, bound and gagged. He escapes, telephones for help and foils the robbers just as they are about to escape with the plunder. George Larkin displays his usual amount of reckless acrobatic ability, leaping from buildings to scaffolds and finally, in capturing one of the escaping safe crackers, he makes a clean two-story leap to the ground.

"A Flyer in Flapjacks." (Kalem. Ham and Bud Comedy. One reel.)—Ham and Bud have a trying time when they attempt escaping the vigilant eye of a Los Angeles police sergeant. The scene shifts to a restaurant where a chef is engaged in the fascinating task of cooking flapjacks. A beautiful girl (Ethel Teare), adds interest to a scene in which flapjacks soar mysteriously through the air. The slap stick element enters later, when Ham and Bud capture the chef, stuff him into a barrel and engage a gang of rowdies in a flapjack hurling contest. The climax comes when the sergeant stops one of the flapjacks with his vigilant left eye.

Mutual Program

"Jerry's Big Mystery." (Cub. One reel. Thurs., Feb. 15.)—George Ovey is surely himself in this highly amusing comedy reel. He makes capital out of every occurrence and the manner in which he carries everything before him under the "protection" of a clothier's dummy is really side-splitting. For good, clean comedy, well acted, this reel is a sure winner.

"Reel Life, No. 42." (Gaumont. One reel. Sun., Feb 18.)—The oyster industry is amply dealt with in this picture, from the harvesting of the succulent bivalve on the "Mississippi coast"—so reads the caption—to the canning and shipping of same to the consumer. "Water" is also fully elucidated, from the germ-infested drop to the sea of clouds. An ocean view shown is a remarkable piece of photography. Other subjects handled are training bloodhounds to track criminals; making individual dress forms of the exact size and contour of one's body, and concludes with a dainty terpsichorean act entitled "The dance of the Rainbow." The whole film is well photographed and all the subjects treated are of every-day interest, and should be well received wherever shown.

"Lured and Cured." (Vogue. Sun., Feb. 18. Two reels.)—This picture, well conceived and nicely photographed, carries with it its lesson. Paddy McQuire and Lillian Hamilton, the country boy and girl, are in love with each other and would have wed only for the appearance of a city man in an automobile, who promises to marry the girl "as soon as they get to town." Once in town, of course, he refuses and the country boy with his life's savings in his pocket, goes to get the girl and bring her home. While she is being subjected to all kinds of indignities, he is being carried off his feet by the wiles of the abductor's female aide. He loses his money, but after a stiff fight recovers it and also the girl. The film is well sprinkled with a choice selection of comical situations and should prove a drawing card wherever shown.

Pathe Exchange

"Deep Dyed Villainy." (Mittenthal. Week of March 4.)—This is a burlesque on the ancient melodrama with all the familiar characters, the attempted murder and the threatening scene in the old mill. James Aubrey, long known as the Heine in the old Heine and Louie comedies, is the leading player and manages to evoke a few laughs by methods that are rather elementary. The entire tone of the action is of the slapstick order, being unusual in one scene in that a real slapstick is introduced.

"Picturesque Caledonia." (Split reel. Week of March 4.)—Various rural and water scenes in this Spanish territory extremely well colored by the Pathe process make this half reel enjoyable. The twenty-first number of the Florence Rose Fashion picture shares the thousand feet.

"Uncle Sam's Wards." (International. Split reel. Week of March 4.)—Views of the Manila water front in the Philippine Islands and several pictures of the United States submarines maneuvering in the surrounding waters are shown here and make an entertaining and instructive release. A "Jerry on the Job" cartoon by Hoban of a fairly amusing character closes the reel.

Universal Program

"The Keeper of the Gate." (Rex. Thurs., Feb. 22.)—Douglas Gerrard is featured in this picture by E. M. Ingleton, as a priest, the keeper of the monastery gate, who seized with a desire to see the world, one night goes to the town and joins in the revelry. With the morning he is penitent and returns to his post, forsaking worldly pleasures, but wiser for his escapade. This is a thoroughly human offering, very well put on and which will give offense to none.

"A Million in Sight." (Nestor. Mon., Feb. 26.)—A fine comedy in which the janitor is induced to marry Mr. Newlywed's mother-in-law, believing that she is rich. Lee Moran in character as the janitor takes most of the laughs unto himself, while Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts and Harry Nolan furnish their usual sterling support.

"Mary from America." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Feb. 27.)—Various clever characterizations, an extremely fine suburban English atmosphere and a story by Elizabeth Carpenter that furnishes sustained interest, fortified with innumerable delicate comedy touches unite in making this one of the best three-reelers of the last few months. The production is realistic to a degree, specially in the matter of scene and setting. Douglas Gerrard, Ruth Clifford and an excellent supporting cast appear.

"A Novel Romance." (Victor. Tues., Feb. 27.)—Something of a trite romance between a stenographer and a professor, both of whom indulge in reading the latest fiction. This would have fared better providing an actress with a more fetching personality than that possessed by Flore Parker De Haven had taken the leading role. Paul Byron is opposite.

"Spike's Bizzy Bike." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Feb. 28.)—Dan Russell as M. T. Head, a bicycle racer, has the leading part in this picture, which is right up to L-Ko standard. The burlesque bike race which M. T. wins by attaching a motor to himself is fraught with a number of highly amusing tricks. The direction is good and the supporting players contribute to the best interests of the comedy in a satisfying fashion.

"The Rented Man." (Rex. Two reels. Thurs., Mar. 1.)—The correct title of this very unusual picture would be "renting a father." Francis Marion, as the little boy who pensively watches the other child with her happy parents (Elizabeth James, as the little girl), won the hearts of several mothers present at the review showing. A powerful lesson is brought home, and when the little fellow dreams that his father and mother have returned, the pathos reaches its climax—and then the mother really does return and the man whom he "rented" for a father to show his little girl friend that he could have as much attention as she, proves to be his real father. A pleasing play, quite different.

"They Were Four." (Victor. Thurs., March 1.)—This is one of the best single reels Universal has lately put out. Four Arizona cowpunchers land in Chicago and set out to have a good time, and are taken over to the Auditorium Hotel just in time to interrupt a hold-up of the clerk and guests in the lobby. The clerk and guests, of course, think these men are part of the gang, and the boys decide the hotel people are really "nuts." Meantime the police are summoned and after a while the real situation dawns on all parties. The reel winds up with the departure back to the cow country on a side door Pullman, first throwing out the real crooks who have taken refuge in the same car, the police being handy to pick up and take care of them.

"Evil Hands." (Imp. Fri., March 2.)—An underworld plot with Edith Roberts, Malcolm Blevins and Edward H. Hearn. Very realistic, with plenty of gun-play and the abduction by "the rat" of a "new chick" fresh from the "alfalfa." The theme is the rescuing of the girl by one of the underworld men whose conscience gets to work at the sight of the trusting child who is caught in the meshes. The only fault is the cutting short of the ending, which might well have been built on to the natural conclusion, showing the reform of the rescuer and his reward with the love of the girl.

"Passing the Grip." (Joker. Sat., March 3.)—An anarchist with a bomb, a married pair with a dog, and a honeymooning couple with lingerie all arrive in a hotel together and proceed to get their grips mixed. A chase is the result which is finally terminated by an explosion. The Joker company, headed by Gale Henry and William Franey, do their usual effective work in this offering.

"Tangled Threads." (Imp. Two reels. Sun., March 4.)—A conventional offering dealing with the love of a poor author for the daughter of an artist. She is crippled by an automobile and as a last resort to gain money for an operation the author joins a gang of crooks. A last minute change of mind influences him to turn straight again and he goes home to find that his play has been accepted. The cast does fairly good work.

"Universal Animated Weekly, No. 60." (Wed., Feb. 21.)—Vessels of American Line held up in New York harbor because of Germany's recent submarine proclamation; water front fire, New York City; game of auto-polo, Houston, Texas; recruiting sailors, Chicago, Ill.; Pershing's army nears Columbus, N. M.; Count von Bernstorff with family and staff leaves for Germany, Hoboken, N. J.; freight cars containing army supplies burned, El Paso, Texas; skating race, Newburgh, N. Y.; police guard homes of Europe's envoys, Washington, D. C.; cartoons by Hy Mayer.

Educational Films Corp.

"Foreign Deer." (Ditmars. Half reel.)—Though not containing the humor of the preceding Ditmars releases, "Foreign Deer" is always instructive and interesting. The facts that the deer seldom lives beyond fifteen years of age and that with the exception of Africa and Australia, it is found on practically every continent, are disclosed. The Russian, the Indian, the South American and the European fallow deer are shown in their cages at Central Park. Of particular interest is the sight of the fawns.

MONTHLY INDEX OF RELEASES

All releases of the month are listed. In the index, C. stands for "Comedy"; Cart., for "Cartoon"; C.-D., "Comedy Drama"; D., "Drama"; Juv., "Juvenile"; Sc., "Scenic"; Top., "Topical." The figure before the abbreviation is the number of reels. The date is the date of release and the figure the page of Motion Picture News on which the picture was reviewed. The second page number refers to the music chart for the picture.

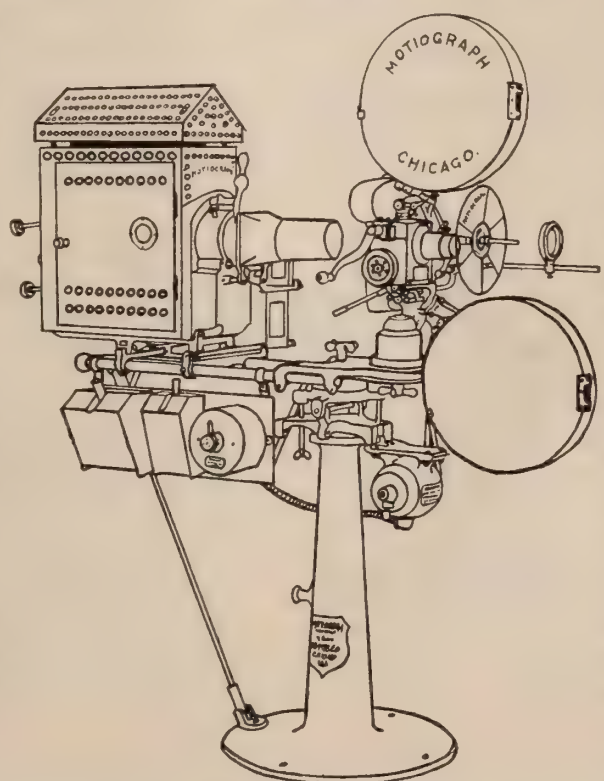
The Improved Model Motiograph

STANDARD OF VALUE AND QUALITY

Made of the very best material and yet reasonably priced.

JUST A FEW OF ITS IMPORTANT POINTS OF MERIT

Lamphouse — Large, well made and well ventilated.



Arc Lamp—To take 8″ lower and 12″ upper carbons. Has 8 different adjustments.

Condenser Mount—So arranged that either condenser can be removed separately when desired; one of the latest improvements on the MOTIOGRAPH.

Mechanism—Runs quiet, requires very little attention from operator, projects rock-steady pictures; due to accuracy in manufacturing.

Star and Cam—Accurately ground and run in oil bath.

New Patented Sliding Disc Connection—which has been used in the MOTIOGRAPH for over fifteen months is becoming more popular every day with the users due to its "no wear" qualities and rigidity produced in the framing device. (Ball Arbor used in former models has been discontinued.)

Two Balance Wheels—T insure perfect action and steadiness of picture.

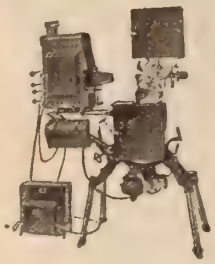
Pedestal—Heavy; designed so as to eliminate vibration.

Magazines—Made of heavy material, will hold 2000 feet of film.

Motor—1-8 H.P., entirely enclosed. Machine can be purchased with or without motor.

Rheostat—Adjustable, 20 to 55 amperes.

Regular MOTIOGRAPH Lens with each equipment.



Outside Shutter—Now used on the MOTIOGRAPH instead of inside shutter as on former models.

List Price—Hand-driven Equipment $265.00
—Motor-driven Equipment $305.00

SECTION OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Everything for Theatre, Exchange and Studio

Will You Be An Associate Editor?

MOTION PICTURE NEWS was started as the service publication of this industry. It has been our aim since the beginning to make it all that this implies. We have attempted to make all connected with the theatre feel that MOTION PICTURE NEWS is being published for them and entirely in their interests—that it is their paper.

We have succeeded in this to the extent of having as subscribers a large majority of the estimated number of theatres in the country. More are joining the ranks each day. We have established departments in the interest of the various branches of the trade which, we know, are helpful from the letters which numerous subscribers write us each week.

NO matter how good these service departments may be, there is always room for improvement. Ideas come up in every man's mind while looking over any book or magazine as to why thus and so is not done or why it is. Sometimes they will help the editor by writing a postal card asking for an explanation; at other times they will pass the matter over as though life was too short anyway.

You must realize that a man in an office may be working along 80 per cent. correctly yet the other 20 per cent. may be waste energy. In order to illustrate: you may be interested in the bulk of the editorial matter in the Projection Department, yet there may be big things you wish we would take up, on which you would like information. The same may apply to the Music and the Picture Department, the Camera Department or any other department. It might have been covered before you were a subscriber, and is worthy of repetition.

WE are all the time projecting new lines of discussion which will be of vital interest to you. Sometimes we are fortunate enough to anticipate your individual needs; at other times you have ideas long before they strike us, if indeed they ever do. Unless these ideas are transmitted to us we are unable to help you as we would like to.

In the Projection Department—some theatre manager or operator may be studying some particular problem, the explanation of which may be simple or it may be difficult. It may demand a series of articles written at some length with diagrams, etc. We may not be able to take care of it in our office at all—we may have to get outside help for we do not claim to know it all by any means. We will, however, see that you have the right information in clear, concise, understandable language.

The same thing may apply to the Music and the Picture Department. Every orchestra leader, piano player or operator of the one man Orchestra Units has his own ideas about picture music and how it should be rendered. Our editor has his as you already know. His suggestions may fit in with your ideas or they may not. If they do, he likes to know it; if they do not, give him food for thought by handing him your ideas right from the shoulder.

WE have had many fine articles and letters from people in the trade which have come under the various department heads—we hope they will all come again; yet those who have written are not the only ones with valuable ideas and suggestions. I doubt if there is a NEWS subscriber who has not one or more topics on which he would like to let out and say his part in praise or criticism of some phase of the industry. The NEWS is the place to have this fling, for it will have the attention of the entire industry and, if the thought conveyed is right, you will not only gain credit for it but will make the entire industry indebted to you.

What MOTION PICTURE NEWS wants is co-operative service. We are trying to help you at all times but, to make this service complete, you must help yourselves and help us help you by your suggestions. It does not make any difference what the subject is, as long as its treatment will help you, or the rest of the trade, or any one branch of it to improve conditions. It is merely the application of the saying, "He is helped most who helps himself."

E. K. GILLETT.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Get Rich Quick Exhibitors—Maybe?

ON page 1196 of the February 24 issue of the NEWS there appeared an article under the heading of "Those Who Do and Who Don't," in which this quotation appealed to me as being applicable to the question which I have in mind: "The future of the motion picture depends upon making the second class—it is a millionfold—want to go to pictures, by making pictures they will want to see." This could easily be transposed into PROJECT PICTURES SO AS TO KEEP ALL CLASSES WANTING TO SEE THEM.

One day last week, in fulfilment of a promise made to visit each of the motion picture theatres on the famous East Side, I visited the Lyceum theatre, at Third avenue and Fifty-fifth street, an upstairs theatre in what was formerly a bank building. The manager, Mr. Bernardick, evidently thinking that I had serious designs upon his operator, was at first disinclined to grant me permission to visit him; however, the operator, Benjamin Greenberg, interceded for me, and we spent a pleasant half-hour together. The equipment in the operating room consists of two Standard Master Model projectors, taking current through a Hallberg 220 volt Economizer, this being used for both machines, so that when the operator was finishing up on one machine and ready to start on the other he had to "steal" the light. I have heard many instances where managers have been a penny wise and a pound foolish, but this certainly does take first prize, and certainly one more economizer would not drive this manager to the poorhouse.

The "show????" consists of from seven to eight reels of film, that's all they can be called, and the admission for this "greatest show on earth" is five cents, which was to my mind exorbitant, considering the age and condition of the subjects shown. The house, which has a seating capacity of approximately three hundred, was a little more than half filled (it being early in the afternoon), and the cleanest part of the theatre was the operating room. (I am not saying this to flatter Brother Greenberg, but because it is the truth.) The picture was entirely too large for the short throw, and the screen was sadly in need of repair, it being a home-made affair, and had at some time or other been painted with some substance resembling aluminum, and the spots and streaks were easily discernible.

The "feature" picture was "Black Friday," made by the Universal, and when I say that this manager pays the magnificent sum of five dollars for a feature you can imagine the condition it was in. The projection by Mr. Greenberg was a surprise—the light was well handled and the screen illumination good; in fact, I might say very good, considering the size of picture and current and the condition of the screen. This operator is another one of those who WORK from 1 to 11 P.M., and, believe me, it is work, no relief for supper, just grind 'em out according to the old formula; drag 'em during the day and run 'em a mile-a-minute at night, all for the princely salary of !!!!!!—honestly, I'm ashamed to mention it.

Can exhibitors find any excuse for such places as this, and do they think that the public can be won over to declare that the motion picture is the ideal means of entertainment for the masses as long as they are fed upon such presentations?

The funny part of my visit was that there was another operator (?) looking for the brother's job, and I would suggest that Brother Greenberg let him have it, then all things would correspond. There should be no difficulty in a man of Greenberg's caliber getting a position in more congenial surroundings, for he has the attributes of a good operator to recommend him; he is careful, painstaking and keeps his mechanisms and operating room in a perfectly clean condition.

In contrast with this experience, it is especially interesting to note a few of the letters appearing in the department this week from operators who find themselves granted shoulder to shoulder co-operating in every possible manner.

A Welcome Surprise

CHARLES A. HOSFORD, Ft. Wayne, Ind., whom I had given up as being lost, strayed or stolen, comes across with the following letter: "Will drop you a line to let you know that the boys in Fort Wayne have organized under the banner of the I. A. (see "Union Announcements"). The boys are all progressive and we hope to keep Ft. Wayne on the map. We have a membership of twenty-two, and all are working and harmony prevails, which we hope will continue, for to my mind when there is harmony half the success is already won. I am getting sample of a film cleaner ready to send you, as I promised some time ago, but since I have the honor of being secretary of this local I have not had much time I could call my own. If I remember right, I think I promised to keep you busy. (You did, but didn't). But don't think that I have been idle, for I have not. I have been working on something that will be of benefit to every brother operator and exhibitor. I will not say what it is until I have finished a model and put it to the test, for I would not want you to recommend something that I was not sure of myself. Please don't think that I have deserted you, for I have not, and please accept my appreciation for your good work and the assistance you are giving to brother operators, and I hope that the Lord will give you health and strength to continue the good work. That may sound as though I was preaching a sermon, but it comes from the bottom of my heart, and I am sure that all operators who know you feel the same. Well, I guess I'll ring off, wishing you and the NEWS the best of success.

Answer: Well, Brother Hosford, it was indeed a welcome surprise when I found your letter on my desk. I recognized the handwriting, even though you mailed it in one of the union's envelopes. I was indeed glad to know that the dream I had when I visited you last summer had come true and that at last the boys in Ft. Wayne had become organized and were willing to uphold the principles of the great American labor movement so essential to their industrial welfare.

I have no doubt but that you will keep Ft. Wayne on the map, for I know that your members are an earnest and progressive lot of men, and I look for big things to be accomplished by local 466. I thoroughly agree with you: harmony must prevail if success is to be won. And you must also realize that harmony between your members and the exhibitors, your employers, is another important factor. You cannot expect to GET unless you are in turn willing to GIVE, and meeting on the common ground of politeness and humanity, I am sure that much good will be accomplished by your members that will be of mutual benefit to your employers and yourselves.

For goodness sake, hurry along that "thing" that you will not say what it is until it has been put to the test. I feel confident that anything in which you have had a hand will be of value. You surprise me. I thought an officer of the union had a soft snap of it; so many seem to think that his hardest work is to draw his salary; but I'll forgive you this time if you promise never to let it happen again. For your kind expression of good will accept my sincere thanks, and I know that you are sincere in what you write. A letter or anything else from you will always be, as this has been—WELCOME.

Frank and Kling of Canton, Ohio

W. C. FRANK and Frank Kling, operators at the Alhambra theatre, Canton, O., are two operators who have made a study of their profession and are ever on the alert to improve projection and incidentally increase the receipts of the box office at the above named theatre. It is a pleasure to hear from men who do things, and the department is awaiting photographs of the Alhambra's operating room and operators. So it's up to you, Messrs. Frank and Kling, to send them in, and pass along for the benefit of other operators the little kinks you have discovered and which you have found to be of value.

Nicholas Power Takes a Rest

MR. NICHOLAS POWER, the famous inventor of the Power's Cameragraph, who has for the past several months been working hard along experimental lines, as well as being in almost daily attendance at his office at 90 Gold street, New York City, is now taking a well-earned rest, and will be among those present at Daytona, Florida, for a period of eight weeks.

The editor of this department hopes that the well-deserved rest will prove beneficial and that Mr. Power will come back entirely refreshed and ready once more to plunge in and take care of the many problems that will have cropped up during his absence.

Considerate of His Operator

Connecticut writes: "I have been operating for the past six years, and in all that time I have never had to call for outside help. This is not because I 'know it all,' for I am always ready and willing to learn. The NEWS has been of great help to me, especially the projection department. I think operators should try and help you in what must be a very tiresome and arduous job, and they could do this if they would look in the back numbers for answers to their questions before writing you. I have every copy of the NEWS for the past three years and have cut out and bound together the projection department, which has proved invaluable. My own trouble may have been treated in some of the back numbers, but if so I have failed to find it. I have an Edison Model B machine, and my picture jumps up and down on the screen. I seldom run over 60 and the film jumps, some makes worse than others. I have put on new tension springs and aperture plate and adjusted them properly, but it seems to have done no good. The machine is nearly new and free from any lost motion. I am fortunate in having an employer who is somewhat different from the ordinary run of managers. When I have put in an extra good day's work, meaning that my light has been well handled and all things as they should be, he slips me fifty cents or a dollar. This is extra, and I get a good salary, too. I think if more managers were to try this scheme they would find that it would bring in better returns."

Answer: The answer to your problem is perhaps due to one of these causes: either the intermittent sprocket is not true, or the intermittent sprocket shaft has been sprung. Dirt on the face of the intermittent sprocket is another cause for the picture jumping. See that it is perfectly clean. When writing about troubles of this kind you should be careful to describe the effect produced. If the jump occurs four times to each revolution the foregoing is no doubt the cause. If it is not caused that way you will have to describe it more fully if I am to help you. It is good to know that there is one manager who is considerate of his operator, and the extra pay should be an incentive, as it no doubt is, for you to do better work each day. There must be a spirit of co-operation between employer and employee if the best results are to be obtained. I would like to call the attention of Mr. Bernardick, of New York City, to the latter portion of your letter.

Lens Trouble

Milwaukee, Wis., writes: "My lens has developed what appears to be white specks. It looks to me as though they were inside the glass. I have tried cleaning them with a soft rag and alcohol, but it does not seem to do any good. Picture is clear and sharp, but not as distinct as it might be. Can you help me?

Answer: I suppose you mean the motion picture objective. It is quite possible that the white specks are due to some flaw in the glass. There are certain kinds of optical glasses which are subject to oxidization and deterioration because of the metals used in their composition. If the specks are in the glass itself the only remedy is to purchase a new lens. It is also probable that the specks are between the two lenses of the front combination. These lenses are cemented together with balsam, and it has been known that the gum has melted under the heat of the spot and run down between the lenses. Conditions such as this are very rare, but they have happened nevertheless, and the strong light from the arc should never be projected through the motion picture objective for any great length of time unless some means is used to dissipate the heat rays. A very old lens has been known to deposit specks by reason of the little chips of balsam that would dry and detach themselves on the surface of the lens between the two glasses. I would suggest that you lose no time in getting a new lens, for it will not pay to let the picture suffer by reason of the small expense involved.

UNION ANNOUNCEMENTS

Local 466, I. A. T. S. E., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The following officers have been elected to serve the Motion Picture Operators' Union of Fort Wayne, Ind., Local 466, I. A. T. S. E.: President, Raymond Racine; vice-president, Ellis A. Karms; recording-corresponding secretary, Charles A. Rosford; financial secretary-treasurer, Kenneth Reichard; business agent, Herman A. Palmer; sergeant-at-arms, Marion Yates; trustees, George Loucks, Walter Foreman and Murry Greene.

The exhibitors of Ft. Wayne are to be congratulated upon the formation of this new union. From my personal observations, made last summer during my visit to that city, I am sure that the boys will make no unreasonable demands and that the spirit of fair play will ever prevail. To the union, its members and officers I can only say: I hope that all things desired will become yours, and while it may take some time to accomplish all you are desirous of obtaining, sooner or later they will become a reality if you take things calmly and don't bite off too big a chunk the first time.

Projection Editor Delegate to Convention

At a regular meeting of Local 384, I. A. T. S. E., of Hudson County, N. J., held on Saturday, February 10, at Brennan's Hall, 642 Newark avenue, Jersey City, N. J., one of the most important rules of business was the nomination and election of a delegate to the I. A. Convention to be held in Cleveland, Ohio. The nominations were: Anthony Boscarelli, Edward Dougherty and I. G. Sherman. The result of the election was that I was chosen to represent my local at this convention.

I Am Up a Tree

P. O. Anderson, Lubbock, Tex., writes: "I have been operating for the past four years and have had no trouble that I could not remedy until I took this machine (which same the brother fails to mention—Ed.) to work with. It is in fine shape now, as I have spent considerable time on it; but one thing I don't like, and that is there seems to be a knock in the intermittent. That is my reason for troubling you. I have not been able to fix it so far, although I have done everything I could think of. If you can give me any information regarding this trouble it will be greatly appreciated."

Answer: Awfully sorry, old man, but as you did not mention the make and model of your projector, and did not describe just what you meant by "knock," I don't see how I am going to be of any assistance to you. You say in one sentence, "It is in fine shape now." I was not sure but that was sarcasm on your part, and if you have made promiscuous use of a screw driver, I think I can agree with you; it must be in fine shape. If you will give me something to work on I will try and help you, so come across.

Wants to Open a Theatre

H. M. Chiftjian, Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "I wish you to advise me as to which is the best projection machine at a moderate price to use in a country theatre. Can any one open a theatre for moving pictures in a small town? Who gives the license to open a moving picture theatre? Thanking you in advance, I remain very truly yours."

Answer: In the columns of the NEWS there are advertised motion picture projectors at various prices, and it should not be difficult for you to find one that would be suitable for the purpose to which you intend to put it. You must, of course, realize that it would not be possible for me to recommend any one as being BEST. That would not be fair to the advertisers. In answer to your second question, I don't see any reason why you should not be able to open a theatre in any town you choose as long as you have enough capital to stand a loss until you are established, but I would suggest that you write to the mayor or town council of whatever town you intend to locate and ask them for information as to the fee charged for a license and the necessary steps to take in securing one. This also answers your third question. If I can be of any further service to you, pray don't hesitate to call upon me.

SLIDES

"THIS is one branch of the motion picture industry which deserves particular attention at this time. It is older than motion pictures and though superseded by them is still prominent in the promotion of the younger art."

The above quotation from an editorial by E. K. Gillett in February 24 issue of the NEWS is worthy of consideration by every theatre owner engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures. The announcement slide is as necessary to the exhibitor as the spark plug to the automobile, and yet few there are who give any great amount of thought to it. I remember, and it was not so long ago when illustrated songs were the vogue, that it was not an uncommon occurrence for a singer to report at the theatre with a set of slides to illustrate the song which was to be sung, and the manager after looking at the slides would refuse to allow their use, claiming that they were so badly done that he would be ashamed to inflict them upon his audience. Yet these self-same managers today will inflict announcement slides (that are more important than the song slide ever was) upon his audience that all too often are an absolute insult and are to a large degree responsible for the failure of the feature advertised.

Radio Appoints Canada Agents

The Radio Mat Slide Company, Incorporated, 121 West 42nd street, New York, who are manufacturers of the Radio Mat typewriter slide, announce that the T. J. Malone Film, Incorporated, of Montreal, Canada have been appointed as agents for the distribution of their slides in all Canadian territory. Mr. Voight of the Radio Company states that their business is increasing and they are adding more dealers each week to the list of supply houses who are now handling their products.

Excelsior Announces New Catalog

The Excelsior Illustrating Company is preparing a new catalog of their slide announcements. This company has originated many unique ideas for making slides attractive on the screen, and the new catalog will have several different sections showing how this company has made a thorough study of the different requirements for various needs and occasions.

The exhibitor can turn to the right department of this catalog and feel sure of finding exactly what he wants to fit the particular time and place he wants to fill. If he does not find exactly what he wants, he can indicate by a selection from the catalog to the style which most nearly suits him, and his individual preference can be expressed in different wording, or a special design made up for him on short notice.

The new catalog will be issued in about two weeks, and will contain about fifty pages crammed full of "slide" knowledge. A postcard, 'phone or call at the offices of the company, 219 Sixth avenue, New York City, will bring the catalog by first mail.

Slide Co. Moves

The Greater New York Slide Company, 154 West 45th Street, New York, announce that after February 19 their entire manufacturing department and sales offices will be located at their up-town address.

Previous to this date the manufacturing end of the business was carried on in the Academy of Music Building, 14th Street, New York.

Novelty Slide Urges Patriotism

In these trying times of international complications, the heart of the exhibitor will warm up with patrotism which is reflected on his screen. Throughout the country exhibitors are displaying hand-colored slides of the leading characters in the current crisis. Particularly welcome are the patriotic slides produced by the Novelty Slide Company. These embrace various styles of the American Flag, individual slides of the President, his cabinet, prominent Army and Navy officials and all the national songs by verse or chorus. An interesting lecture set, "Our Modern Navy," has just been prepared and is meeting with enthusiastic reception wherever shown. The exhibitor that sends his patrons away happy and enthused is laying the foundation for his own success in business.

The Movette Camera and Projector

FRANK L. HOUGH, well known to the older men in the motion picture industry, has again come into the limelight. For years Mr. Hough was with the Edison Company, later going with the Kleine Optical Company, of Chicago, where he remained up to about a year ago. Since that time little has been heard of him in the trade though his friends made statements that he was engaged in working up an invention which should bring him considerable renown.

This has now taken form in the shape of a small camera and projector sold for amateur use. Unlike most so-called home machines, it does not claim to be the equal of the standard professional outfit. There is no attempt made, in the statements issued by Mr. Hough, to prove that it is the cure-all of the classroom—he merely says that the outfit is for the amateur who wants to make a start in motion pictures. If his ambitions carry him further, then the next step is the professional outfit. No films can be shown in the projector unless they have been taken on the special film which fits the special camera. This puts the outfit in a class by itsel and does away with the objection which has always militated against other special films and projectors. It stands in the same position as the "Kodak" does to the professional camera outfit.

In speaking of the difficulties in perfecting his invention, Mr. Hough said: "Of course I could do what I wanted by adding all the intricate appliances that you see on the professional camera and projector, but these cost more than the amateur would like to pay."

We are not in a position to describe the outfit from a technical point of view as we have not as yet seen a demonstration or examined the mechanism. When this has been done the various details, efficiency, etc., will be taken up. From the description sent us by Mr. Hough the camera is about the size of a book—7 inches long, 5 inches high and 2½ inches thick, carrying 50 feet of film. The projector over-all is 20 inches long, 9¼ inches high and 8 inches thick. A nine-foot picture can be shown up to 12 or 15 feet. The light is supplied by a Mazda lamp attached to the ordinary house current. The film which is produced by the Eastman Kodak Company is made of non-inflammable stock.

The Movette Camera Corporation is located in Rochester. Its president is W. E. Gerry, of Chicago, organizer and sales manager; Frank L. Hough, the inventor, is vice-president and manager of production. Dr. William Shallenberger, of Waterloo, Iowa, is treasurer, and J. F. Shallenberger, of Chicago, is secretary.

A Different Kind of Manager

F. E. B., Hamilton, Ont., writes: "I guess I am the first from Hamilton to come to you for information since we are readers of the NEWS (some paper). Years back I wouldn't look at it, but today I can't wait for Wednesday to come (Wednesday is the day the postman delivers it to me). (What was your reason and why the change?—Ed.) I happen to be working in one of the oldest houses in the city, and I have two of the oldest machines around here, which is quite natural if the house hasn't been doing very good business for some time. Just lately a new man took the place over, and he is doing a bit better than the rest. He is new at the business, but there's one thing he understands, and that is that the operating room is the most important part of the theatre. He is getting me a new machine, but can't very well afford to get two. I have two model B Edison machines. In one I have just installed a complete new intermittent movement, which is working very good; but I am not satisfied, so I am asking you a few questions. Could the improvements made on model D machine, such as film tracks instead of the plain aperture plate and tension shoes, be used on a model B; also, could the inside shutter be taken out of a model B and an outside shutter be put in its place? I have written two letters to the Edison people, but have had no reply. Hoping that I have not put you to a lot of bother, and wishing you the best of success, I will await your answer."

Answer: I take my hat off to your manager. He has the right idea. So different from the exhibitor in New York who caused me to swing the hammer. The operating room is the MOST IMPORTANT PART OF THE THEATRE, and its equipment must be in first class condition at all times. The fact that he is getting a new machine for you shows that he is at least willing to give his patrons a run for their money, and even though it is not possible to get two, half a loaf is better than none. The suggestion you make in regard to changes on your machine is something I do not care to recommend, and I would suggest that you do nothing until I have heard from the Edison Company, to whom I am submitting your letter and will advise you further as soon as I hear from them. I think I will have better luck than you did, but perhaps your letter went astray and that is why you did not hear. I'll say this, though, I never heard of a Model D.

Dundee, Omaha, Model Fireproof House

LOCATED in the restricted residence district of Omaha—namely, Dundee—is a model suburban fireproof house, the Dundee theatre. This theatre is constructed of brick and concrete, and measures 30 feet by 114 feet.

The lobby measures 28 feet by 30 feet and is finished with tapestry brick and stucco. A tile floor adds to the attractiveness, and all woodwork is finished in mahogany. Doors are set with leaded glass windows.

The interior of the theatre is finished in brown, fading into a light tan ceiling. The side-walls are Tiffany finish, and the ceiling is overlaid with a conventional design in hand-work. The theatre has a seating capacity of 410. The chairs are 20 inches wide, with 32 inches for knee room, and are finished in French gray (waxed). These chairs were furnished by the American Seating Company of Chicago, and are all that is desired for the comfort of the patrons.

The lighting is the semi-indirect system, there being ten twenty-inch baskets covered with gold silk and artificial wistaria, and also twenty side-wall brackets finished in the same style. The theatre is illuminated at all times with sufficient light to read a newspaper.

For ventilating the house a Sturtevant vacuum system has been installed, by means of which the air in the theatre is changed completely every three minutes.

The projection room has two Baird projectors and Hertner electric transverter. The unusual thing is the amount of amperes used. The throw is 97 feet onto a Gold King screen, 12 feet by 16 feet, recessed in a four-foot shadow box in black. A Marlux lens and a 6½ and 7½ inch Minescus and Bi-Convex condenser is used, burning a half-inch cored carbon above and a three-eighths-inch solid carbon below, working at all times from fifteen to eighteen amperes with a perfectly illuminated picture.

Sandidge a Specialist in Studio Lighting

J. HOWARD SANDIDGE, who originated and designed the artificial lighting system used in the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company's new studio, graduated from the Tulane University of Louisiana as a mechanical and electrical engineer in 1908. After a few years of practical wiring experience as electrician in private plants, and in the lighting and engineering department of the Commonwealth Edison Company, he assumed the position with the Cooper - Hewitt Company as illuminating engineer for the Western division, with which concern he has been affiliated since 1912. For the past two years Mr. Sandidge has been specializing in motion picture studio lighting. His thorough technical training, coupled with his knowledge of practical conditions in motion picture studios enabled him to design a system of lighting which was theoretically perfect and which has since been proved practical from every standpoint. Readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS will remember the exhaustive description of the Rothacker plant's lighting system appearing in last week's issue and which was written by Mr. Sandidge. Letters have been received declaring the article an unusually valuable contribution to the all too scanty literature devoted to the technical aspects of motion picture production.

Cameragraph Club Ball

THE Cameragraph Club, composed of the various heads of departments in the Nicholas Power factory, and of which the superintendent, Theodore Uleman is president, will hold their second annual ball on the evening of Saturday, March 3, at Arcadia Hall, Halsey street and Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y. Music for the occasion is to be furnished by Ferguson's Band. Messrs. Nicholas Power, Edward Earl, J. S. Skerret, Will C. Smith are honorary members of the club and take an active interest in all its doings. The committee in charge of this year's ball promise that no effort will be spared to make this an event that will eclipse last year's, and those who remember the exceptionally good time had then don't believe it can be done. The editor of this department wishes the Cameragraph Club and its members a most enjoyable evening, and a successful one financially, and regrets that it will be impossible for him to take part in the festivities, as he will be in attendance at the I. A. Convention in Cleveland, Ohio.

Taking and Projecting Filters for Two-Color Cinematography

ALTHOUGH considerable work has been done upon color cinematography and new processes and improvements on existing methods are constantly being devised and patented, the progress in this art has been rather along mechanical instead of physical or purely scientific lines, and while cameras and projecting mechanisms of considerable efficiency for color work have been introduced, still the all important consideration—the color rendition—is at once seen to be far below the limit of practical possibilities in most "natural color" films when the processes are demonstrated upon the screen.

That the cinematographic industry has produced some highly ingenious and skillful mechanicians is beyond question, but, of the scientific minds, capable of exploiting intelligently the laws of light and color, and the physics of the photographic process, few are to be found in the entire realm of cinematography.

While a few of the "color processes" are not without promise, and while some of the concerns endeavoring to produce cinematographic color-films have endeavored to secure competent technical advice, still much time and money is being fruitlessly expended in attempts to develop color processes which are not founded upon correct theory, and the disappointing results secured in such cases are the natural and inevitable outcome of empirical procedure.

Since a photographic, or cinematographic, color process must stand or fall according to the degree of accuracy with which it can reproduce the coloration of the subjects photographed, it is apparent that the physical laws of color analysis and color mixture must be duly regarded in securing the negative color sensation records, and in projecting the positives, if a satisfactory approximation to nature's hues is to be attained. Obviously, therefore, the proposition is primarily a physical one, and mechanical considerations enter only to the extent to which they may facilitate the attainment of theoretical requirements. We are therefore chiefly concerned with a study of the capabilities of our sensitive photographic material and the color filters through which the color films are photographed and exhibited.

Three-color photography became an accomplished fact years ago, with the introduction by Ives of the Photochromoscope, and it has been proven possible to produce wonderfully faithful photographic reproductions in natural colors by either additive or subtractive tricolor processes. But in cinematography the production and subsequent projection of three separate sets of color sensation records has been fraught with practical difficulties of considerable magnitude, and a survey of the methods by which inventors are endeavoring to produce motion pictures in color shows that most workers have adopted the two-color system of analysis and reproduction, and in doing so they eliminate many of the difficulties incident to three-color procedure.

Now a two-color process, being at variance with accepted theories of color perception and color synthesis, could never produce theoretically correct results, but, nevertheless, evidence is not lacking to show that with correct scientific knowledge and accurate and intelligent manipulation, motion pictures which are pleasing to look upon and which closely approximate natural coloring, may be made and exhibited by two-color methods.

We shall therefore consider the scientific aspects of two-color cinematography and endeavor to determine how best we can approximately reproduce all colors, whether simple or compound, by the production and projection of but two sets of color sensation records. There is probably a considerable variance in opinion among workers upon color cinematography as to what the exact spectral transmissions for a set of two-color taking filters should be, and inded the subject is of vital importance, but it appears that up to the present nothing much has been written upon the subject by those best qualified to do so.

In this article we shall therefore review that which has so far been put upon record, and endeavor to draw some conclusions, concerning the practical application of the information at present available on the two-color process. As is generally known the first tangible results in color cinematography were those of G. Albert Smith, which became known as the Kinemacolor process. Although some previous attempts had been made using only two color filters, Smith was the worker who boldly abandoned the attempt to secure sets of trichromatic records and attacked the proposition of cinematographic color rendition by a two-color process. The early experiments of Smith and his associates form the subject of an interesting notation on two-color taking filters by Colin N. Bennett,* and since this appears to be the first contribution to the literature of the subject we quote from its interesting contents.

Bennett says:

"Filter sets used in Kinemacolor have in the past been of two classes, namely, "light" and "dark" sets. The dark set is simply the regular tricolor red and tricolor green of the Wratten standard trichromatic set. In practice it will be found that a two-color positive consisting of combined orange-red and blue-green transparencies made from negatives taken with the aid of the above two filters will give (when viewed by artificial-yellowish light) a fair representation of colors other than those containing a pronounced admixture of pure blue. For brilliant rendering of sky and water effects the pioneers of Kinemacolor had resort to the "light" series filters, consisting of, respectively, orange transmission to about D½ E and an over light edition of tricolor green, passing distinctly more greenish-blue than the regular or darker tint.

With these "light" filters blues are rendered far brighter than before, as are also artificial greens, by virtue of their large blue-green content. Exposures also are very much shorter. On the other hand, grass and foliage green are reproduced in the resulting two-color image as a bronze brown.

Upon my (Bennett's) introduction to the theory of the process it was explained to me that this browning of natural greens when using the "light" series filter set was due to the green content passed by the orange filter, but the explanation was fallacious; the true reason of the difficulty having to be sought in the swamping action of the additional blue-green and greenish-blue rays passed by the green filter, as was speedily proven by experiment.

The problem then remaining for solution was how to obtain a set of two-color filters as light as possible, so as to allow of very short exposures (a necessity in the Kinemacolor system of cinematography) and at the same time give renderings of foliage shades which were at least green and not brown. The solution was found to be in the employment of a small proportion of pure blue or even blue-violet, light in the form of a restricted transmission band in the green filter wherewith to make the necessary records of blue objects, at the same time cutting out the offensive blue-green rays from little b to F½ G or thereabout.

Dyes used for the purpose were, for preliminary experiments Metanile Yellow to cut out blue-green, coupled with the use of small additions of filter yellow to damp down violet and ultra-violet light which might otherwise upset the apparent transmission values of natural colors as recorded in the blue-green record negative. Such a dye combination was found to have considerable practical advantage over whatever may have been originally used, but it was latterly superseded by the use of fluorescine and filter yellow employed in a similar manner to the above. In each case the green color was imparted to the filter by a sufficient addition of filter blue-green to the dye bath. Screens so dyed were a light yellowish-green hue, being much the color of spring foliage itself. On spectroscopic examination they could be seen to pass an inconsiderable but yet sufficient amount of pure blue light. Unfortunately, it is not possible to give definite spectroscopic charts, since the research was hurried at the behest of the proprietors of Kinemacolor, the most successful specimens of filter being at once returned, with the object of standardization at the laboratories of Messrs. Wratten and Wainwright. It may be said, however, that green screens so compounded for two-color work, though having widely different apparent tints and densities, all showed great practical advantage over the usual blue-green previously in use.

The orange-red screen, which should go with the above to make the set complete, was not found to present any difficulty whatever. Almost any orange to orange-red tint not transmitting farther than E can be used with success. The more yellow the orange the more will apparent yellows be bleached in the resulting two-color transparencies. Napthol Orange combined with Filter Yellow in the proportion of 4 to 1, and in strong solution will be found very useful for dyeing up the red screen. Mono and Di-brom fluorescine combined with filter yellow in equal proportions give dye solutions useful for redder screens."

These notes of Bennett's form an interesting historical account of some of the early work on the Kinemacolor process and are worthy of some consideration by workers on two-color cinematography. We would not, however, advise anyone to experiment with the dye combinations mentioned, for filter dyes of greater luminosity and more suitable for orange-red and blue-green filters are now available and, as will presently be seen, filters are now obtainable which are capable of better reproductions by the two-color process than are those constructed according to Bennett's specifications, provided, of course, that suitable color-sensitized film stock is used.

It is interesting to note that, as Bennett states, the successful samples of Kinemacolor taking filters were forwarded to the laboratories of Wratten and Wainwright for standardization and practical improvement. As Dr. Mees was at that time in charge of the Wratten Research Laboratory, it is reasonable to assume that the proposition of preparing suitable and efficient two-color filters for Kinemacolor work received his consideration.

We therefore next refer to a brief article on the Kinemacolor process by Dr. Mees, which appeared shortly afterward,* and which in spite of its brevity contains a sort of pronouncement as to what Mees thought the transmissions of two-color taking and projecting filters should be.

Quoting Mr. Mees:

"Attempts to apply triple projection methods to Kinematography have frequently been made, but have not yet come before the public, except in the "Kinemacolor" method, which uses only two colors, abandoning the third, and so eliminating much complication. A two-color method can, of course, at best be only a compromise, but it would seem at present to be the most satisfactory for Kinematograph work.

"In the 'Kinemacolor' method the spectrum is divided into two, one taking filter being orange-red and the other blue-green. In order to get a satisfactory rendering of greens, the latter taking filter must be rather greener than a true blue-green filter would be, and in the resulting picture blue is little distinguishable from blue-green, while a yellow is rendered rather as an orange than a true yellow. The results are, however, surprisingly good considering the theoretical difficulties of the method and the extreme badness of ordinary two-color work, and they will doubtless be even better when the promoters of the process have learned that above all things they must avoid in their pictures the two colors which they are using for projecting. These two colors are a pure red and a very bright blue-green, or minus-red color, and in some of the pictures at present (1911) there is a tendency to use these two colors in the composition of the original scene, so that one gets little girls dressed in red blouses and blue-green skirts, which colors the process renders with only too distressing fidelity. Considering the excellent way in which the process reproduces subdued colors, such as browns, there really seems no need for this.

"There is no doubt, however, that Kinemacolor is a success, and is a striking testimony to the good practical results which may sometimes be obtained from a theoretically inaccurate system."

While the foregoing abstracts give some idea of what the regions transmitted and the hues of suitable two-color cinematographic filters should be, it is necessary before considering any specific sets of filters to set forth some of the qualifications which a set of filters should possess if they are to prove suitable for practical work in color cinematography. Although it is not the purpose of this article to enlarge upon the relationship of the trichromatic theory of color vision to the preparation of taking filters for the color process, still it should be mentioned that filters for additive tricolor work are generally prepared with regard for the red, green, and blue-violet fundamental color sensations, as expressed by some recognized set of sensation curves or color equations.

The sensation of white is caused by stimulation at equal intensities of the red, green, and blue sensitive nerve groups of the eye, although the actual relative luminosities of the primary color sensations are, according to Abney:

Red	Green	Blue
65.7	33.8	0.44

This serves to show that only a very small percentage of blue-violet light is necessary in the formation of a synthetic white by additive projection. The filters for a subtractive color process (either two-color or tri-color) need not be prepared with regard for any set of color sensation curves, for in a subtractive process the whites result from the absence of all color, instead of being produced by the addition of regulated amounts of light of the fundamental sensation colors as in the additive process.

Since the exposure interval in cinematography is the same for each of the successive images upon the film strip, it will be apparent that a pair of taking filters to prove useful in a two-color cinematographic process, in which sets of red-orange and blue-green negative sensation records are secured through the same lens, must be capable of yielding red-orange and blue-green sensation negative images of approximately equal density within equal

Music for Oriental Pictures

AMONG international pictures none seem to be able to hold our attention and popular demand so lastingly as Oriental pictures. There seems to be no end of picturizing the magnificent scenes and episodes of these ancient countries.

Oriental music should therefore be a standard factor in any musician's library, and to facilitate the selection of such music I wish to call the attention of all musicians to the following Oriental numbers, which can be bought wherever music is sold.

1. "March Turque," by Eilenberg.
2. "March a la Turca," by Mozart.

The enormous popularity of these two marches is unquestionably due to the spirit, vim and brilliancy of their rhythms. These marches are very effective and splendidly suited for Oriental scenes of marching, etc.

3. "In the Sudan" (A Dervish Chorus), by Sebek.

One of those slow, dreamy and wonderfully melodious melodies, with good work for the clarinet in small, or oboe in large, orchestras. Suitable for desert scenes, resting caravans, etc.

4. "Salome Dance," by Tobani.

Not many Oriental numbers have been published in recent years to fit the famous "Oriental Dance of the Seven Veils," as danced in Richard Strauss famous "Salome."

5. "Turkish Patrol," by Michaelis.

One of the most interesting and desirable compositions which a leader can program, suitable for Oriental scenes, such as soldiers coming and passing in the distance.

6. "Oriental Veil Dance," by Aronson.

I have used this number in almost every feature with Oriental dance scenes.

7. "March of the Janizaries," by Hosmer.

A characteristic composition of rare melodious beauty; a number suitable for any Oriental scene of Moderato action.

8. "Urada," Arabian Walts, by Tugginer.

An exceedingly melodious and very charming waltz, really Oriental from start to finish—usuable for Oriental society scenes.

9. "Oriental Dance, Characteristic," by G. Verdi.

A wonderfully effective number and the many novel effects introduced make it one of the most interesting and desirable compositions which a leader can program.

10. "Oriental Love Theme," by Leo Oehmler.

A sweet, dreamy, flowing melody of exceptional beauty.

William L. Becker

Mr. William L. Becker, the noted musician and general musical director of the William Fox Theatrical Enterprises, is dead. We musicians, and especially those who are striving for a perfect musical accompaniment have lost in Mr. Becker not only a friend, but a man who fought all his life for the betterment of the music profession in general. "His battles were ours."

Mr. Becker, besides being a thorough musician of twenty years' experience, directing some of the largest theatre orchestras in the country, was also a composer of merit.

His last works, fourteen numbers specially written for the moving picture, and consisting of "Agitatos," "Hurries," "Furiosos," etc., have been published by the Carl Fischer music house. Mr. Becker, with these compositions, supplied a long-felt want insomuch as the numbers, while very effective, are not difficult to play. Under a nom de plume Mr. Becker also wrote a series of very interesting articles on how to play and what to play for motion pictures. These articles appeared in the Exhibitors' Bulletin, issued monthly by the Fox Film Corporation.

His advice was often sought by some of the most prominent musical directors of the motion picture houses of the country, and, while busily engaged with other matters, he always found time to supply their wants. We have lost in Mr. Becker a pioneer in the field of music and pictures, a man who with honor represented the music profession.

THE EDITOR.

Finds Well-Known Pieces Hit the Spot

The Editor,

I have read regularly with very much appreciation the various letters that have appeared in your department of the experiences of organists throughout the States, but so far have not had the pleasure of reading a letter from a Canadian organist. As I take much pleasure in reading of the obstacles of American organists, I am writing this letter in the hope that the pleasure may be vice versa.

I am an organist at a large theatre in Ottawa, the seat of the government, and also the center of the government and offices. One would naturally infer one's audience to be somewhat of an intelligent nature. The inference is correct.

When I assumed my duties here, two years ago, I was not certain what the audience wanted. To find out what they appreciated the most, during intermission I played various pieces, I touched the various operas, those which were well known, those like Puccini's operas that contained just a few known airs, songs, or a sentimental ballad style, and other classics that I knew were well known. The applause was fair, but I knew I had not touched the mark.

One evening a request came for the selection to be the "Prince of Pilson." At the finish of this selection the applause was so continuous that I had to play the latter part of the selection over again. This was the spot—the musical comedy. I obtained a list of all the musical shows that played here in the last three years, and purchased the music to each one, and now I'm playing at least two a week during the pictures if possible—with success.

I have found during my experience at playing pictures in this country and England, that the audiences like to hear occasionally during the pictures something they know. They feel flattered that their musical knowledge is so far established to know what the organist is playing. I am in favor of playing old songs if they fit the situation on the screen. When a picture concludes with a love scene, or lovers' reunion, play modern songs, such as "Because" or "Rose of My Heart" or a song of such lines as those mentioned.

In conclusion, I am not in favor of the theme being used in motion picture playing, for I find it hard to educate the audience to theme playing; also, sometimes a picture calls for a theme seven or eight times, and when the theme selected is a long one, the playing of a certain piece frequently during a picture distracts the mind from the picture, and that, as every successful organist knows, is the last thing on earth to be done. Musical comedies, popular numbers, always the latest, old and new ballads, not too much improvising and playing to the audience are the principal things that have assisted me here.

Here's to your success.

NORTON H. PAYNE.

Rossini and "The Barber"

IT is said that Rossini wrote the "Barber of Seville" in fifteen days. H. A. Edwards gives the following paragraph of how Rossini worked at the time:

"Rossini worked so quickly that at times he found himself ahead of his poet—though he regards the putting down on paper, the writing of verses is but trifling labor compared with that of composing music. Thus, without waiting for verses, he found a melody or devised a form for the next musical piece in the order agreed upon, and thereupon asked the obliging Sterbini, his librettist, to furnish him with suitable 'words.' Besides a leading singer in the next room, the poet and composer had by their side a number of copyists, to whom Rossini threw the sheets of music as he finished them. For thirteen days the joint authors had scarcely time to eat, and Mr. Azavedo asserts that they slept but little, and then only on a sofa, when it so happened that they could not keep their eyes open. For thirteen days Rossini did not shave; and when some one observed how strange it was that the 'barber' should have let his beard grow, he replied that if he had shaved he should have gone out, and that if he had gone out he would not have returned as soon as he ought to have done. It seems incredible that in thirteen days the whole of the 'Barber' should have been composed in score; but it is certain that the contract binding Rossini to compose it was only signed on December 16, and he directed the first, second and third performances of 'Torvaldo e Dorliska' on December 27, 28 and 29."

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

Attractive Toledo House Is the Temple

AMONG the largest motion picture theatres in Toledo, Ohio, none are of a more refined and elegant pattern than the chain of theatres owned by the People's Amusement Company, under the direction of Edward A. Zorn.

One of the most attractive theatres under the direction of Mr. Zorn and management of Theron Haas is the Temple theatre, located at 225-227 St. Clair street. This theatre was completed during 1914, the plans having been drawn up by J. W. Earl of 1210 Ewing street, Toledo, Ohio. The theatre measures 70 feet by 120 feet, and is probably one of the most attractive structures in the business district of Toledo.

The attractiveness of the spacious lobby is something that deserves considerable comment. The decorations in the lobby are of old rose and white. Doors leading into the lobby and foyer are of sheet metal finished in mahogany. Doors leading into the theatre have French plate glass set into them and curtains draped upon them. The box-office and manager's office are at one end of the lobby and are finished in mahogany, framing also being of sheet metal with glass set in them. The box-office is equipped with an automatic, motor-driven, three-unit ticket-selling machine. The lobby is adorned with numerous large oil paintings of popular film stars, and also plastique ornamental figures. A tile flooring of neat design adds greatly to the already attractive lobby. Indirect lighting is used in this part of the theatre.

Passing through the lobby doors the foyer is reached. This foyer runs the entire width of the house. The same color scheme is used as in the lobby, and pictures of principals and well-known film stars are displayed here.

The interior of the theatre is just as artistically decorated as the lobby and foyer, as the same colors are used.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,250, of which 750 are orchestra seats. The seats in the orchestra are arranged in three blocks, a large block in the center having about fourteen seats across and the side blocks having five side across. The balcony has a seating capacity of 500. All seats were furnished by the American Seating Company of Chicago, Ill.

The stage setting is of imitation marble, with artificial flowers artistically grouped upon it. The orchestra pit is separated from the body of the theatre by a white balustrade instead of the usual brass railing. This lends more of a garden effect to the theatre. A heavy velour curtain shields the screen when not in use.

A hot-water heating system has ben installed in the Temple by the American Radiator Company, this proving to be one of the most efficient methods of heating a large theatre.

In conjunction with the heating system two eight-foot electric exhaust fans were installed to insure perfect ventilation as well as perfect heating.

The projection room, which is located at the rear of the second balcony, contains two of the latest model Simplex projectors, 3 motor generators which are connected in multiple. The length of throw is 110 feet onto a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen.

Both direct and indirect lighting is used in this theatre, all lights in the auditorium being controlled by six theatre dimmers from the projection booth.

Unlike many of his predecessors, Mr. Zorn is firmly convinced of the importance of good and appropriate music for motion pictures, and not a little of the success which he has achieved at the Temple theatre is due to the excellent orchestra and its conductor, Robert Reese.

All musical programs are rendered with exceedingly good taste and fitted remarkably well to the situations. This theatre owns a music library of over 4,000 standard compositions, and the principle of Mr. Zorn and his musical director, Mr. Reese, is not to duplicate any musical composition during the time of at least two months.

The orchestra consists of six violins, two 'cellos, bass, flute, clarinet, trumpets, trombone, traps, piano, and also an organ of tremendous dimensions.

The opening of a performance is usually an overture, which is then followed by the regular performance, consisting of a news reel, soloists, scenes, one or two reel comedy and a five or six reel feature.

Fox, Metro and Artcraft productions are used, and productions of any other film corporations which can be had at open market booking. Admission to the performance is 10 and 15 cents at matinees and 15 and 25 cents in the evening.

The theatre advertises on billboards, fifty 24-sheet posters being posted each week. Street car advertising is also used, this being considered the best and liveliest way of keeping the theatre constantly in the eye of the public. From 240 to 600 inches of car advertising are used each week.

Orient Theatre, New York City

THE Orient Theatre located at 111 West 125th Street, New York City, one of the busiest thoroughfares of Greater New York, although not a new theatre is very attractive. The theatre measures 50 feet in width by 100 feet in depth and is constructed of concrete, brick and steel.

A special front was constructed for this theatre consisting of opaque glass arch and two columns, one on each side of the entrance to the lobby. At night the arch and columns are illuminated by electric lights which are enclosed in this arch and the columns. This makes the front very attractive, giving a soft dissolving slide projecting machine, and two Western Electric white light to the whole exterior. Arc lamps are also used in conjunction with the illuminated front and make the front of the house as bright as day.

Attractive Outside and Interior of the Temple Theatre, Toledo, Ohio—In the Centre Bert Reese, Conductor

The exterior lobby contains the box-office and numerous display frames taking one and three sheet posters and stills of current and coming photoplays. These display frames were furnished by the Vogel Cabinet Company. The doors leading into the interior lobby are finished in mahogany set with small plate glass window. The exterior lobby is lighted by the semi-indirect method fixtures being of opalescent glass, chain suspended type. On either side of the interior lobby is a cast iron stairway, the step sills being of white marble. These stairways lead to the balcony. The doors leading into the theatre proper are finished in mahogany, and are studded with French plate glass mirrors. All trimmings, such as door plates and stairway railings, are of brass. The interior lobby is lighted by indirect method. The fixtures here are of metal, design being of the Renaissance style. Both exterior and interior lobby have a tile flooring of a plain but attractive pattern.

The interior of the theatre is neatly decorated in red and gold with artificial floral decorations. The side walls are covered with a heavy tapestry cloth of flower design and are divided into panels; the borders are of gold plastique ornament.

For the interior lighting both semi-indirect and direct lighting is used. In the center of the house is a large electrolier containing an abundance of 40-watt Mazda frosted bulbs. On the side walls are several pilot lights which are cleverly decorated with artificial flowers.

Steam heating system was installed by the American Heating Company and this system used in conjunction with the ventilating system keeps the house perfectly heated and ventilated.

Th theatre has a seat capacity of 600, 450 seats being orchestra seats and the balance of 150 are balcony seats. Opera chairs were furnished by the American Seating Company of Chicago and are equipped with self raising attachment which was furnished by the Self Raising Seat Appliance Company of Newark, New Jersey.

A Seeburg organ installed at the cost of $4,000 furnishes the music for the picture and serves its purpose to the perfect satisfaction of the management.

The projection room located at the rear of the balcony contains two Simplex projectors of the latest model and are equipped with the Feaster Feed Attachment. Edward Wilson is the operator at the Orient and is to be commended for the wonderful results he obtains. The length of throw is about 80 feet onto a plaster screen which has been specially treated.

There are six to nine performances each day consisting of nine reels each. Metro, V-L-S-E., Selznick, World-Brady and Universal Special Features are used. The stars proving most popular and the best drawing cards are: Madame Olga Petrova, Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Ethel Clayton, Carlyle Blackwell and Mary Pickford.

The manager, Mr. Wolff deserves credit for his ingenious methods of conducting a theatre. Mr. Wolff uses newspaper advertising extensively and also distributes handbills to the patrons as they are leaving the theatre.

We wish you continued success, Mr. Wolff.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

ARKANSAS

Jackson and Palmer of Harrison, Ark., have leased the Vandover building at Rogers, and will begin at once to remodel it for an up-to-date theatre with a seating capacity of 400. The cost of the new theatre will be about $7,000.

CALIFORNIA

The New theatre, owned by Anderson and Wood, has been formally opened at Redding, and is pronounced by film men who have seen it to be one of the best houses in the upper Sacramento Valley. The house will be a combined motion picture, vaudeville and road show theatre, it being planned to show vaudeville every Tuesday evening and road shows at irregular intervals. Lester Harvey, who has been pianist at the Majestic theatre at Chico, Cal., for a long time, has been placed in charge of the music, Mrs. Lulu Farmer will have charge of the box-office, while David Vaughn will be the operator. The new house will be in charge of James T. Wood, who will have the active assistance of his partner, B. H. T. Anderson, of Chico.

The Turner and Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco is having plans drawn for a new theatre to be erected at Richmond, an east-bay suburb of San Francisco, and bids for construction will be invited at an early date. The new house will have a seating capacity of about 1,800, and will cost in the neighborhood of $70,000. This concern has adopted plans for a new theatre at Sacramento and work on this will also be started at an early date. This house will be much larger than the one to be built at Richmond and will cost about twice as much. A theatre is also being built for the same firm at Stockton, and its opening will be an event of the spring.

COLORADO

That prosperity has struck Coalinga and the adjoining oil fields is manifested on every hand, not alone by the sales of property, but by the amount of new building now going on, also proposed buildings. There is some talk of a new opera house, but the parties who are figuring on it, have not as yet made any of their plans public. The A. P. May building on Fifth street, between E and F streets, will have additional improvements made to the front, which embraces an arch across the alley between the two buildings, so as to make the two fronts correspond in appearance, and will add to the appearance of the street as well.

ILLINOIS

Plans for the opening of the old Majestic theatre at Waukegan to legitimate attractions and occasional feature pictures are now under way and a local man who is promoting the move has started negotiations with the agents of the Pabst Brewing Company, owners of the building. It is planned to make a number of important changes in the house and to open the doors to the public on Saturday or Sunday evenings. If the plan materializes nothing but the best features and legitimate attractions will be shown at the theatre.

A. Mason & Co. of Peoria have leased the opera house, and will take immediate possession and begin remodeling the interior. Their opening bill will be a Mutual bill, featuring Helen Holmes. On Sunday evening, "An Enemy to Society," featuring Hamilton Revelle. They will start the serial, "The Iron Claw," on a week from Tuesday evening. Mason's three-piece orchestra will furnish the music for the theatre. They expect to put in more opera chairs and may run vaudeville.

W. A. Cox and Telford Johnson have leased the Viola Opera House, and the former will conduct same as a motion picture theatre. Mr. Cox has been conducting a picture theatre in Alpha for the past four years.

IOWA

The Grand theatre at Estherville which was recently destroyed by fire at a loss of $125,000, will be rebuilt and the cost will be much larger according to the manager.

KANSAS

T. J. Stinson, an enthusiastic Paramount exhibitor in Spearville, has begun the erection of a thoroughly modern and absolutely up-to-date Paramount theatre on Main street in that city. The new theatre will be 25 feet wide and 90 feet deep, with a seating capacity of 500. Nothing will be included in the make-up of the playhouse that is not the latest idea in playhouse construction.

LOUISIANA

The Strand theatre at New Orleans, owned and operated by the Saenger Amusement Company of Shreveport, Texarkana, Monroe and Alexandria, will open its doors on or about March 15 next.

MASSACHUSETTS

George E. Newton has sold to Michael Staller and Henry Norman nine lots of land containing 32,484 square feet, corner of Blue Hill and Woodrow avenues, and running through to Ashton and Livingston streets, Dorchester. It is a part of the original land of the West End Street Railway, which contained 272,224 feet, assessed at $54,400. The purchasers are to erect a motion picture house, with stores and bowling alleys, at a cost of about $150,000. George E. Kimball was the broker.

The men interested in the building of another ground-floor theatre in Westfield have plans under way. It is proposed to locate the theatre with the main entrance from Elm street, plenty of room being available in the rear for the theatre itself. The present plans would call for an outlay, including real estate and new building, of about $75,000. The proposed theatre will seat 1,225 people, with about 700 on the ground floor and the rest in the balcony and boxes.

A. B. Ross is planning to build a moving picture theatre between Central Vermont railroad and Ross block, Millers Falls.

The Lancaster theatre, Lancaster street near Causway street, Boston, was opened February 16. It is leased by the Lancaster Trust; seats 1,600. Programs: World, Metro, Paramount and open market; polite vaudeville; organ. Two performances daily, 2 and 8; Sunday concert, 7.

The Strand theatre, Watertown, Mass., is being thoroughly remodeled by Emile A. Levesque of Salem, Mass., to reopen in March. Complete new equipment is being supplied by Sam Asher of Boston Motion Picture Supply Company; seats, screen, projecting machines, lobby fittings, etc. Mr. Asher also outfitted the Lancaster theatre, Boston, complete.

The estate of the Reed family, which is located in the heart of the Harvard square section, Boston, has been sold, and the new owners, who are interested in motion picture houses in Boston, are reported as ready to raze one of their parcels in the square in order to build a modern business block, which is also to house a motion picture theatre.

MICHIGAN

J. R. Denniston of the Family theatre, Monroe, announces that work will start at once on a new $55,000 theatre, to seat 1,000 people, and to be ready the first of next September. It will be devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

periods of exposure. It is, of course, possible to vary the exposure ratio to suit the various filters in the case of color cameras equipped with multiple lens systems, but in cinematography by the alternate process or by any process, using only one lens, and an exposing shutter of the rotary type, it is only possible to vary the exposure through the red and green filters by a small fraction of a second, so filter sets of approximately equal luminosity are a necessity in practical two-color cinematography. We shall, therefore, only particularize concerning filter combinations which transmit light of their respective colors in equal percentage, or nearly so.

It might be thought that the manner in which the film stock is panchromatized (sensitized to the less refrangible rays) is a factor in the consideration of the relative exposures through the respective filters, and theoretically this is true, but, assuming that film strongly sensitized to the entire red and green spectral regions is used by all competent workers in color-cinematography, it seems upon consideration that in this connection the action of the sensitizer used has not much influence upon the exposure ratio, that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

because the exposures are so brief in color cinematography that we can hardly establish an exposure ratio. The action of the dye bath used in rendering the film stock sensitive to all visible rays has a considerable influence on the fidelity with which colors will be reproduced in the projected results as we shall see, however, and at a future time we will dwell at length upon the subject of color sensitizing as applied to the negative film stock used in colorfilm production.

Coming now to the study of an actual pair (or set) of two-color taking filters we will first consider the combination termed by Bennett a "dark" set and consisting of the Wratten Standard Tricolor red and green filters (Catalogue Nos. 25-A and 58-B2). The spectrophotometric absorption curves of these filters, plotted upon a wave-length scale are shown in Fig. 1, while the lower diagram (in Fig. 1) shows the transmission bands of the two filters oriented against each other, thus showing graphically the extent to which the spectrum is jointly transmitted by this combination.

By showing diagrammatically the combined transmissions of a set of filters we are thus able to study their action, and also to draw other conclusions concerning their suitability for use in the various color processes. As is also shown by the lower diagram in Fig. 1, the transmissions of the tricolor red and green filters overlap one another, and the region of this overlap is indicated by dotted lines. It is necessary to give consideration to the spectral regions which are transmitted to some extent by both members of a filter set, for the rendition of certain colors is governed by the location and extent of the overlaps in the transmission bands of the filters used in color processes.

Let us now examine in detail the properties of the red and green taking filters shown in Fig. 1. The tricolor red filter transmits on an average 60 per cent of the incident light from the extreme red at W. L. 700 down to W. L. 600 in the orange, and absorbs abruptly at W. L. 580 in the yellow. The tricolor green filter although its measurable spectral transmission commences at about W. L. 640, may be practically said to transmit from the orange at W. L. 600 down to the blue-green at W. L. 480 and its transmission band does not extend into the pure blue at all.

As a certain percentage of pure blue or blue-violet light is necessary in additive color synthesis if we are to have pure whites, it will be appreciated after a study of Fig. 1, that the filter combination there shown would not prove suitable for additive two-color cinematography, by reason of the fact that no pure blue is transmitted.

Upon further reflection it is reasonable to assume, however, that these tricolor red and green filters might prove suitable for a two-color subtractive process for portraiture or other work where warm tones have to be dealt with but where blues and violets are not much in evidence. The Kodachrome process of subtractive two-color photography is based on this principle and Kodachrome transparencies are evidence of the pleasing results possible, in portraiture and kindred subjects, with a process in which the blue sensation is lacking.

If we consider the action of this pair of filters when used to make color pictures, it will readily be seen that reds and greens will be vigorously rendered. It might be thought that the objects corresponding in hue to the regions where the transmission bands of the filters overlap would be rendered as blacks, and this would be so if the filters were exactly complementary to each other in hue and the positive transparencies dyed up in theoretically correct subtractive colors. The result, however, of staining the red sensation positive with a dye complementary to the actual blue of its taking filter and the green sensation positive with a dye of complementary hue to its taking filter may be anything from black or gray to an impure yellow of low luminosity much degraded with black, in the rendition of yellows.

The richness of the color rendition in the two-color transparencies produced with the tricolor red and green filters is much enhanced by viewing the resultant pictures in artificial light. Being rich in yellow rays artificial illumination gives an added warmth to the colors of the transparency, but blues are, of course, totally lacking in the results produced in this way.

Regardless of whether the process to be practised is an additive or a subtractive one, it is apparent that in order to approximate the range of blues met with in Nature, a somewhat different set of two-color taking filters is required than those which we have just been considering.

TO ALL PARAMOUNT EXHIBITORS

Arrangements have been completed with the Paramount Corporation whereby the Cahill-Igoe Company is now in a position to furnish Filmettes on all future releases of

PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Filmettes introduce a welcome and radical departure from Heralds and old-style methods of advertising motion pictures. Correct advertising principles are followed in exploiting your business with this new service.

Filmettes Appeal to the Emotions, Suggest Action and Get You Real Business

Filmettes are human interest stories of the plays and players told in a curiosity-compelling style. They come in a convenient size — 7 by 6 inches — are artistically designed and beautifully printed.

Filmettes are filled with salesmanship and showmanship and they advertise your theatre, your service and yourself in an efficient manner.

Starting with SNOW WHITE we have prepared Filmettes on the following pictures:

REDEEMING LOVE SLAVE MARKET
EVIL EYE
GREAT EXPECTATIONS
HAPPINESS OF THREE WOMEN
BETTY TO THE RESCUE
A GIRL LIKE THAT LOST AND WON
GOLDEN FETTER
HIS SWEETHEART
THE WAX MODEL
EACH TO HIS KIND
HER OWN PEOPLE
THE BLACK WOLF

Filmettes on future releases will be ready for shipment as soon as the picture is released. Filmettes are carried in stock in large quantities and all orders will be shipped same day as received. We sell direct to exhibitors. Place your standing order now.

Prices: 250 for 50c; 500 for 90c; 1,000 for $1.60; 2,000 or more at $1.50 per 1,000 — Less 5 per cent for cash with order should be your first consideration, whether building a new theatre or repairing the old. But be careful to insist on materials that will not require frequent repairs—with the resultant interruption to business.

"BERGER'S Classik" STEEL CEILINGS

will give permanent attractiveness and safety to your theatre—at reasonable cost. They are sanitary, fire retardant and non-collapsible—cannot crack, chip or fall down. Never require repairs as do wood lath and plaster ceilings. Hundreds of beautiful designs to choose from.

Without obligation, may we send particulars and Catalog D.M.N.?

YOU NEED THE STUDIO DIRECTORY

Consult its biographies of stars in preparing copy for local newspapers. Your press notices will draw larger crowds.

Everybody wants to know something about the players featured at your theatre.

Better Satisfaction

This notice is addressed to the minority of our subscribers who do not regularly answer advertisements.

The service described is, however, open and free to all who wish our help.

We do not wish to discourage you from writing direct to our advertisers; in fact, you do not do enough of it for your own good, but we do want you to get the proper goods to fit your needs.

Your inquiries thus received will be forwarded to reputable manufacturers, even though the goods on which you wish information are not advertised in the "News."

If You Have a Feature Film For Sale or Rent

It's your business duty to yourself, and to your customer, to secure positive prints clear, clean and brilliant, showing on the screen all that is good in the negative.

We do this properly, and, while our price may be a bit higher than for ordinary work, our quality is decidedly higher, and when you do business with us you are sure and safe and satisfied.

Usually, where low price is the bait, quality is a secondary consideration. With us it's quality first, last and all the time—properly priced of course.

We will gladly send studio-laboratory description and price schedule at your request.
